No one disputes the fact that prices are governed by the law of supply and demand. If more people want an article than can be supplied, prices are bound to enhance, and it is only a question, therefore, as to who is entitled to the enhanced price; as the manufacturer assumes all the risk of the business, he surely is the one entitled to any advantage of price by reason of a short supply. The canned goods packer's cost is also greatly increased in a season of short pack. He has to invest at the beginning of the season large sums of money in cans, cases, labels, solder, etc., and he must provide for his maximum requirements, based on his contracts with the growers. In the event of a failure, or partial failure of the crops, he has to carry over a portion of these supplies until the following year at considerable expense of interest and depreciation.

His cost is also proportionately higher. His skilled labor must be hired by the year, and as the packing season is confined to a few months, this burden of expense is very heavy. In addition, all other help must be engaged for the season and be numerically large enough to enable him to take care of a maximum pack. Consequently, with half a pack, the labor cost is nearly double. Again, when the season is untoward, and the quality of the raw material inferior on account of weather conditions, the average yield is greatly reduced, owing to waste, etc., which again enhances the cost.

Effect of Climate.

Again, climatic conditions one year may be such that the time and temperature for processing require to be entirely different than for other years, and if this vital factor is overlooked, the packer stands to lose his whole pack, or a large portion of it. Few people stop to realize that the canning industry is a hazardous one, and requires a large amount of technical knowledge.

There is plenty of evidence to prove that last year there was scarcely a canning factory that made money. In fact, those who know, state that very few, if any, factories ever made any money in canned goods, and notwithstanding the apparently profitable prices ruling during the past seven or eight years, a number of factories presumably prosperous, were practically bankrupt.

Blames the Promoters.

Promoters for machinery supply houses are responsible to a large extent for would be canners losing their money in the canned goods industry, as they hold out specious promises of large profits which fail to materialize, the important fact being overlooked that the industry to ensure success requires large experience, technical knowledge and systematic economies at every point.

It is the purpose of this article to show that taking the facts mentioned above into consideration, prices this year cannot be justly considered as unreasonable.

Some Comparisons Made.

It will be shown that prices this year compare favorably with average prices during the past seven or eight years. In fact, in 1903, before there was any consolidation of canners, tomatoes sold at $1.60 per doz. to the wholesale trade, and corn at 85c per doz. or equal to about $1.00 per doz. to the retail trade, including freight, wholesaler's profit, etc. Within the past seven years, tomatoes opened in two years at $1.15 per doz. and in one year at $1.25 per doz., and a close study of prices will invariably show that in years when prices have been low there have been large carry-overs and heavy packs, and when prices have been high, there have been small carry-overs and light packs.

The law of supply and demand governs prices.

Large Packs Appreciated.

It goes without saying, that 99 packers out of 100 would far sooner see a large pack and low prices, than a small pack and high prices.

Average retail prices for years 1903 to 1909, inclusive, as compared with 1910 are:

	7 Years' Average.	1910.
Corn	90	92½
Peas	80	95
Tomatoes	105	112½
Beans	85	90
Raspberries	175	175
Strawberries	175	150
Peaches	190	185
Pears	180	175

These prices, it may be said, include freight, wholesalers' profit, brokers' commissions, cash discount, etc., so that a line listed at $1 means, possibly, not more than about 82 to 83c at the most to the packer.

While no attention is paid to United States' prices, in arriving at prices in Canada, yet inasmuch as the canning business in the United States is in a very bad way owing to excessive competition, it is interesting to compare their prices with those ruling in Canada where competition is not so fierce.

Middle Prices Compared.

Basis prices are taken from the New York Journal of Commerce of Oct. 4, 1910.

That the comparison of prices may be fair, middle prices have been taken, although the taking of the maximum U.S. prices would be justifiable in view of the fact that Canadian goods are equal in quality to the U.S. best. In fact, it would be a very risky thing for anyone to buy U.S. canned goods that were not of established brands on account of inferior quality of so many of their packs.

Also for purposes of comparison, to the United States F.O.B. factory prices have been added the same charges as to the Canadian, viz., freight, wholesalers' profit, brokerage, cash discount, etc.

	U. S. Retail Prs.	Canadian Retail Prs.
Corn	.97½	.92½
Peas	1.12½	.95
Tomatoes	1.05	1.12½

From this it will be seen that there is not much difference between the Canadian and United States retail prices, and this in spite of the competition of the several thousands of United States packers.

Poor Crops in U.S.

The explanation is that the crop conditions in the United States are much the same as in Canada. Peas, in some instances were only a 40 per cent. delivery. According to the American Grocer, Sept. 28th, page 7, the pack of tomatoes in Maryland, Virginia and Delaware, will be 30 to 40 per cent. behind last season.

Again note, that although the canners' retail prices for Standard peas this season are 92½c per dozen, even wholesalers who now want peas are buying them, where procurable, at $1.15 per doz. The reason is plain—the supply does not equal the demand. It may be the same with tomatoes and other lines.

It may also be said that before the largest packers made their prices this season, some other canners were asking as much as 10c per doz. more for their products than the opening prices. One pea factory last year sold its pack of peas at 10c per doz over the opening prices, for the simple reason that they were the only peas obtainable.

Take the prices of other food stuffs, how do prices compare with last year, for instance:

Evaporated apples in 1909 were 7½ and 8c per lb.; this year they are 9½ and 10c.

Prunes, the boarding house staple, in 1909 were 5½ and 6c per lb.; this year they are 7½c.

Canned salmon in 1909 was $1.70; this year is $2, and so on with numerous other lines, such as raisins, currants, Californian fruits, all of which are 20 to 25 per cent. higher in price this year.

It would be hard to prove in the face of these facts, that prices this year are unreasonable. Indeed, the probabilities are that the market will be much stronger as the season advances.

Should Clear Out Stocks.

Under normal conditions, it may be said that the factories at present existing would have produced far more than the country could consume in any one year, and with favorable weather conditions next year, there should be a heavy pack and low prices, so retailers should see to it that they clear out their stocks before new pack next year.

IS BUSINESS GOING BACKWARD?

Another Co-Operative Society Said to be Retrogressing.

Rossland, B.C., October 13.—I. H. Stephens, who has been secretary-manager of the Union Co-Operative Association, Limited, Rossland, since its beginning in May, 1908, has severed his connection with the business and has gone to Kamloops. Up to October, last year, the progress was satisfactory, and in that month the business of Paulson Bros., was bought out. Since then the results are stated to have not been so satisfactory, a small deficit totalling up, and Mr. Stephens has been adversely criticised.

The business of J. A. Howse & Co., grocers. North Bay, Ont., has changed hands, having been taken over by a man named O'Donnell, lately engaged in railway contracting. Mr. Howse will manage the business for a time.

Alberta Merchants Watch Co-operative Movement

Many Petitions to the Premier for the New Legislation—Secretary of Edmonton Retail Merchants' Association Issues Warning to Retailers—Monthly Meetings of This Organization Held at Which Trade Matters are Discussed.

Edmonton, Alta., Oct. 13.—There is now a Retail Merchants' Association operating here. Its aims and objects have been set forth by N. Y. Burnett, the secretary, who gives his reasons why the association should be assisted in its work by all merchants.

He advises particularly about the Co-operative movement which he says is one of the most important points to be watched by every retailer from now on.

He says that the U. F. A. have repeatedly petitioned Sir Wilfrid Laurier about this legislation during his recent western tour.

"It will be remembered by many that such legislation was promoted in the Federal House for two years in succession, and that it did not become law owing to the action taken by the eastern retailers' association. In the next session it is evident that the west, and particularly Alberta, will be quoted by the promoters of the bill as desiring its pasage. This, for every retailer in business to-day is a serious menace, and it behooves all to unite for the purpose of defeating the legislation."

Dangers Not Realized.

"If the members of the U.F.A. and those who have been prominent in their petitions to the Premier only knew the past history of co-operative movements in Canada, if they only realized that this movement was instigated by a group of capitalists and manufacturers for the purpose of establishing a string of stores across the continent with exceptional legislation to back them, and to procure for them customers at a more rapid rate than would otherwise be the case, if they knew the losses which have been suffered by the members of similar associations in Ontario and Quebec, they would petition Sir Wilfrid Laurier to strenuously oppose this legislation instead of seeking to promote it.

"Some may believe that since the life of these organizations rarely exceeds two years, it will not permanently injure the local merchants. But the injury done is much worse than would appear at first, and in this way: it is the easiest thing in the world to set up the cry of robbery and extortion—the public are always ready to listen to a specious organizer who tells them that the local stores are robbing them, and there is already a sufficiency of that kind of literature from the mail order houses.

The Public Mislead.

"The net result of the establishment of the Co-operative Trading Company is that the public are led to believe more than ever that they should buy their goods anywhere rather than from the local store, so that after the co-operative company has perished the mail order house receives a large increase of business from that community.

To Hold Debates.

Meetings take place every month or more often if necessary, and during the winter there will be debates and discussions on live subjects common to all trades. The competition of the mail order houses will be discussed and dealt with, as well as such subjects as advertising, store help, municipal taxation, etc., etc. The annual general meeting will take place in the Edmonton Bonspeil week.

The officers are: president: T. S. Thompson; vice-president, M. W. Webb; treasurer, H. W. B. Douglass; secretary, H. Y. Burnett.

The address of the secretary is 1 McDougall Court, Edmonton Alta.

OPEN TO ALL RETAILERS.

B.C. R. G. A. Changes It's Name to B.C. Retail Merchants' Association.

Victoria, B.C., Oct. 13—A meeting of some import to the retailers of British Columbia was held here recently when the executive of the British Columbia Retail Grocers' Association passed a resolution to change the name of the association to the Retail Merchants' Association of British Columbia, making membership open to all classes of retailers in the province.

This has been done with the idea of making it possible to organize a branch of the association in every town large or small. Letters have been received by the association asking that branches be established at Cranbrook and other points in the fruit district, and the executive has decided to take steps to form branches at Kamloops, Revelstoke, Nelson, Rossland, Cranbrook and Fernie during the latter part of November. A delegation consisting of the president, secretary and one other director will visit these towns for that purpose.

It has been decided that the associations of Victoria and Vancouver will continue their separate existence, but both will affiliate with the association of British Columbia.

The objects of the association are to secure better relations among retailers, wholesalers and manufacturers.

John Rich, general merchant, Gimli, Man., has assigned to the Winnipeg Jobbers' Credit Clearing House, Ltd.

One advantage claimed in selling fruit and vegetables by weight is that the purchaser cannot have any complaint of receiving short measure and likewise the grocer is not robbing himself by giving more than he should through an over generous impulse.

Salesmanship Includes Educating the Customers

Buying Must Take Second Place to Selling, Says Merchant of Long Experience—Claims That the Dealer's Power to Suggest and to Talk Intelligently About His Goods Adds Greatly to His Business—Stocking "Table Luxuries" and Selling Them at a Good Profit.

By Henry Johnson, Jr.

The adage, "Well bought is half sold," has wrought an amount of harm impossible to calculate, and it should promptly be relegated to the scrap heap. For our business is primarily selling to which buying is a secondary incident—important, truly; but still secondary.

I can go into this another time in more extended detail, if desirable; but meantime let us adopt the saying of the successful Hebrew merchant: Any fool can buy goods, but it takes a merchant to SELL them." And while I am talking of this merchant, I'll tell you one thing he did. He was offered a line of shirt waists at 98 cents, or $1.06, or some such figure, and, while thinking over the proposition, he took one of the waists over to the sales counter and asked: "Girls, can you get $4.95 for these?" The girls examined the goods and came back with the unanimous verdict: "Of course, we can!" The waists were bought, advertised as a "great special," and sold—at $4.95 each. You can judge for yourselves whether this was a game of buying or of selling. I leave it to you.

Take Time to Educate.

The difference between the two stores in your town, with which you are familiar, lies in this faculty of SELLING as opposed to buying. You know they have about equal natural and locational advantages, but one makes money and grows, while the other about plays even and stands still. One is run on the selling idea, the other on the buying maxim. The aim of the one merchant is to get rid of his goods faster than they come in; the other is always looking for "bargains." One studies to tell what he has, attractively, in every way possible, while the other thinks that prices will talk alone — and so he does no particular talking himself. The one gives his customers so much to think about; keeps them so interested in what he is doing, that they have no time to listen for faint echoes of the doings of the other. The other "buys" at "right prices," and mostly keeps his stuff because he "is so busy buying that he has no time to advertise" and "cannot take time to educate the public."

This matter of "educating the public" is something to which caustic reference is frequently made by the idle-minded, shallow-brained dealer. He does not think deeply enough to realize the great truth that we learn by teaching and that only through telling things to others do we learn them ourselves.

Was Against Suggestion.

The elder Johnson was a good merchant for his day; would be a good merchant were he alive to-day; but he had some fixed ideas and principles of his own. One idea was that we should advertise, telling people by the printed word what we had and the price thereof. Many things he could tell remarkably well and, with articles which he wanted to tell about, his descriptions were full, snappy, pithy, complete. Thus he was great on the tea, coffee, flour and kerosene which constituted the bulk of his business.

But another of his ideas was that when the customer came into the store we should be promptly courteous and attentive to that customer's wants, but should refrain from making suggestions; holding that it was not our business to "increase the customer's list of wants." He held that many worthy people would come for things they needed, and their needs might be modest—also their resources—so that it would needlessly embarass them, and maybe drive them away, to talk up articles which they might feel they could not afford. All of which may to-day be translated into the statement that any salesman, wholesale or retail, in any line of business, must be tactful; which means he must say and do the right thing at the right time and under the right circumstances.

A visit to a Big Store.

When it came my turn to handle the Johnson business something had quickened in me a desire to make the business a better business, an up-to-date business; and, as nearly as I can recollect it, the first inspiration came thru a visit to the once famous store of Chas. S. Slack, in Chicago. I remember well how staggering to my senses was the gorgeous display of groceries I saw there. I had no previous idea that there were so many things in the grocery line. Sardines at 60 cents, 75 cents, 90 cents, for a single box; goose liver sausage in short single casings packed in tin at $1.25 a tin; it was past belief. When I got back to our store a few days afterward I found a great change. It had been a "big store," but was now shrunk to very small proportions; and was as bare as it was small. Obviously, I had a long way to travel to reach a knowledge of the difference between what is called "long berry Mocha" and the true article from Aden or Mokha; and other things too numerous to mention."

Later on I began to reach out for some better trade. A sign which I had seen in a Chicago window read: "Table Luxuries" and it looked like a pretty sign to me. I gathered together the few items in our stock which might pass as the beginning of a fancy grocery stock and put them into a window. It was an old fashioned window, glazed with many small panes, but it was the background of the beginning. I remember that we had a few cans of hotel mushrooms, called for by those whom I looked upon as the high-livers; a modest stock of bottled mustard; a few bottles of "olive oil"; a little meat sauce, and a few other things. Surely a small line of "table luxuries," but the exhibit took the place of an untidy shelf of ——— soap which had spread its fly-specked length across that window—so was a step in advance. Best of all, however, this was the beginning of an effort to develop selling power; and in a few years that effort completely changed the character of that business.

Must Have the Goods to Sell.

A Chicago jobber whom I once consulted about putting in a small lot of candied cherries, Jordan almonds and angelica, told me: "You cannot sell fancy groceries unless you have them to sell," and therein ennunciated a great truth. The beginner must go slowly—especially on angelica—but he must have the courage to put in a few things such as are likely to appeal to the more fastidious and well-to-do trade; and, if he has that courage, he will likely have the further necessary initiative to SELL those things. And that is the way it works.

We learn by teaching. When a customer asks you what angelica is and you have to brush up your own knowledge so as to tell her you are "educating the public," to be sure; but note how your efforts educate yourself. And it is so throughout your entire business.

Good Profit on New Lines.

One great trouble with us is, has been, and I fear bids fair to be for some time to come, our fear to ask sufficient compensation for our efforts and enterprise. Whenever we got a new item into the old store the first question we asked ourselves was: "For how little can we afford to sell this?", which is a dangerous question. The proper plan is to add as wide a margin as the traffic will bear until the item is tested out. If it sells readily and becomes a staple, it is true that it can be handled for less: but even so, the price should not be reduced until there is plain evidence that you are asking too much, and that evidence you can recognize without special help. Also, conditions which may render it imperative on the part of your neighbor, whose trade is more of the staple, workingmen's or farmers' character, to reduce his price may not affect you at all; and my strong advice is that you be sure you have to cut the price before you do it.

PUBLISHED EVERY FRIDAY

DECLINE IN SYRUP AND STARCH.

Corn syrup and starch declined during the week, the changes being issued by manufacturers on Tuesday.

The decline on syrup is about 25 cents per case and ¼ of a cent per lb. bulk. On starches it is from ¼ to ½ cent.

The cause is attributed to a plentiful supply of corn in the United States from which these products are manufactured.

ANOTHER DROP IN SUGAR.

Following the slump in sugar last week another decline is recorded amounting to 10 cents. This was given out by the refiners on Tuesday.

The claim is that the raw market is decidedly weak and the break in prices was a natural sequence. It was pointed out in last week's issue that even at the reduced quotations published then the situation was weak. This view of the question has been fully borne out.

During the corresponding week last year the price of standard granulated on a Montreal basis was $4.70. Now it is $4.85.

AFTER THE BAD EGG.

The opponents of the bad egg in Canada are hot on its trail. Wholesale men have presented a petition to the Minister of Agriculture requesting that a law be passed and enforced making it an offence to sell rotten eggs.

It is about time something were done. A few months ago The Grocer published an article pointing out that all sorts and conditions of eggs were coming on the large wholesale markets. There were rotten eggs, boiled eggs, half hatched and hatched, china nest-eggs, etc.

This had a direct tendency to advance prices, for when the wholesale men had thoroughly candled their receipts, they had either to destroy or sell at a low price the bad and deteriorated eggs. For the good variety they raised the prices to retailers in order to get a profit and hence eggs to the consumer were high.

If this new legislation comes into effect it will tend to remove the difficulties at the source of supply. It will mean that farmers will take greater care in gathering and marketing their eggs and that shippers to the large centres will be more particular in accepting them and forwarding on to the commission men.

Anything that will raise the quality of a food-stuff to the consumers is to be commended, and it is the hope of all handlers of eggs that something advantageous to both wholesale and retail dealer will be effected.

EDUCATIVE COMPETITIONS.

"Name and place in order, and state market value of samples of dried fruits; samples provided."

The above is a sample question from the list that will be placed before grocers and their assistants at the 18th annual London Grocery and Allied Trades International Exhibition. In connection with the exhibition there is a big competition in all the various work connected with the grocery trade for which valuable prizes are given. Grocers from all parts of the United Kingdom gather at London, Eng., where the Exhibition is held and with every year greater interest is manifested in the competitions.

A few more of the subjects under which competitions are held may be mentioned to give an idea of the comprehensiveness of the questions.

The three best executed advertisements, written with chalks on ordinary sugar paper, any color, royal hand, advertising butter, eggs and bacon.

Salesmanship—Competitors will be required to show their methods in serving a customer, introducing to him new goods, etc.

There are questions for master grocers only, for managers of shops and for assistants only, all the questions bearing upon the ordinary problems that are presented to grocers in the pursuance of their general duties.

At the exhibition hundreds of manufacturers have displays and this union of the different interests in the trade results, it is said, in good effects for all.

This illustrates the value which retailers in the Old Country place upon the Science of Retailing. If all the merchants in this country studied such questions as are presented to those on the other side of the Atlantic, the retail trade would be placed upon a much better basis. We would hear of less price-cutting and less failures.

PREPARE FOR THANKSGIVING.

It is not too early to begin planning for Thanksgiving. There is every prospect of a good demand for poultry, grapes, cranberries, oranges and bananas. These are not the only lines for dried fruits will no doubt prove an important item.

The occasion will of itself bring an increased business but it is a sign of real ability when the grocer plans for something extra, trade that will be the result of his special endeavors.

MAKING AN AUTUMN WINDOW.

An autumn or harvest window can be easily arranged now and with only a little care it can be made quite attractive. Different ideas will be suggested to different grocers. Only the fruits and vegetables of the season need be used.

One plan might be followed in this way: Secure four or five fairly thick bundles of corn stocks and a sheaf or two of wheat and arrange these as a back ground. On the floor of the window spread maple leaves, preferring, if possible, to get those that are beginning to show the golden colors of autumn. Arrange them evenly over the floor. Place a little pyramid of honey in jars on one side at the rear and another of the same size on the opposite side near the rear of the window. Make a small pyramid of apples and put it well up to the front; one of peaches and another of pears might be placed not far from the honey at the back.

In each of the rear corners a pumpkin would be appropriate. A small bunch of beets or carrots might be placed here and there, and also a few bunches of grapes.

The artist who arranges it should be careful not to get too much in the window as it will then have the appearance of being overcrowded and the effect will be lost.

The pyramids should not be large and should be arranged as regularly as possible. The clerk who begins this window will find that he has many methods of completing it and there is really nothing about it that presents a difficulty. A neatly written card bearing words something like this: "The Season's Harvest," "Harvest of 1910," "Nature's Generosity," etc., as well as a few price tags might well be added.

May Soon be an Offence to Offer for Sale Bad Eggs

Petition Goes to Minister of Agriculture, as Intimated in Previous Issues of The Grocer—Wholesale Dealers Behind the Proposition—They Suffer Too Many Hardships, They Claim, With Present Conditions.

Toronto October 13th.—The produce section of the Toronto Board of Trade have forwarded a petition to the Minister of Agriculture at Ottawa, Hon. Sydney Fisher, asking their assistance in procuring the necessary legislation to have the sale of rotten or decayed eggs prohibited.

The petition concludes "We would be pleased to have an opportunity to meet you in conjunction with the members of the Montreal Board of Trade and explain our views on this question. The condition of the eggs that have been received this summer may be considered as "the last straw."

The amount of waste often reached a high percentage until the patience of the wholesale men had about reached its limitation.

During some periods of the past season the shrinkage was altogether too heavy, they say, and as all the goods received from the country were "candled" the wholesalers knew to a fraction the exact state of affairs. "Receipts of questionable and bad eggs is an old evil but it remained for the season just closed to witness the trouble in its worst form" said one.

Throughout the country the reports were identical, proving that the trade as a whole, had to endure the same conditions.

Bad Eggs Raise Prices.

"The farmer or shipper from the country received his price and from the quality of a large portion of the eggs it could be assumed that nothing else concerned him. Having paid for both good and bad, the jobber could not be expected to bear the loss and he had to make good the deficit by raising the price to the retailer and finally to the consumer. In many of the States of the union in the south it is made a criminal offence to circulate on the market such impure food products as rotten eggs."

The produce jobbers are seeking a law that will make it an offence to sell impure eggs. By this it is thought the farmer will be more careful in his examination of the eggs before shipping them.

In the presentation of their case the Toronto wholesale men will be supported by the Montreal Board of Trade and by Professor Elford, of Macdonald College, Quebec, and by Professor Graham, of Guelph, both of whom have been active in promoting the cause of purer food production on Canadian farms.

BUILT CATHEDRAL OUT OF SOAP.

North Bay, Ont., Oct. 13.—The windows of R. Rankin, grocer, and mayor of North Bay, last week presented a novel appearance.

His son Willie, a lad of only fourteen years of age, built from blocks of soap, a Cathedral which in itself was certainly unique.

It was enclosed within an imitation stone fence and with wing, belfry and spire was a fine piece of architecture.

He obtained the idea while visiting the Exhibition in Toronto. This is only one of the many little things that have the tendency towards the making of successful business men in the future.

A CLERK'S INTEREST IN DISPLAYS

Toronto, Oct. 13.—A feature in window dressing is the special work that may be seen on Friday evenings in the windows of R. Higgins & Son, Yonge St. While goods are always displayed there in an attractive manner a special endeavor is made to give distinction to the Friday evening windows and of late they have been decidedly meritorious.

A fruit window recently displayed was exceptionally good and gave evidence of the artistic and appropriate ideas of R. H. Patchett who dressed it. Particular effect was given the window when seen by night as the lights greatly enhanced the ensemble effect, and attracted practically every passer-by. It is encouraging to find that among the clerks of today there are those who are preparing themselves for the best the trade demands of them.

A window of poultry and meats was also well designed and carried out. It was the work of C. Currier, the manager of the meat and poultry department.

PEGS AS REMINDERS.

Chatham, Ont., October 13.—"Just stick in a peg" is the way the H. Malcolmson grocery store helps the customer to remember her wants when the order taker calls.

The store supplies the customer with a list of two score or more household articles which the grocery handles, ranging all the way from matches to sugar. Instead, however, of printing this list on cardboard, it is printed upon a bit of smooth wood, half an inch or less in thickness and about eight inches long by five across. There is a hole at the top of the board, for hanging in a convenient place on the kitchen wall. Opposite the name of each article is a small hole, and the customer is supplied with pegs which fit these holes.

The lady of the house, when she finds her supply of sugar running low, just slips a peg tightly into the hole opposite the word sugar, and so on down the line. When the store's representative calls for her order, or when she is ready to telephone, instead of having to rack her memory to find out what she needs or search her entire larder to see which tins are empty, the housewife takes down her "card" from the wall, and from the pegged items compiles her list.

This saves the housewife's time and temper, leads to the inclusion in the order of items which would often be forgotten, and leaves the salesman free, if he wishes, to devote his time and attention to pushing "specials" not included in the regular list of goods.

In addition the card is, of course, a practically permanent advertisement of the store, hanging in the kitchen day in and day out. Besides the list it contains the firm name, telephone number, and other advertising matter.

The device is comparatively inexpensive since, after the first expense, it does not have to be renewed; the only requisite being to keep the housewife well supplied with pegs.

RETAILERS BLAME CANNERS.

For Prices of Canned Corn and Tomatoes—Talk of Holding District Convention.

Hamilton, Ont., Oct. 13.—At their last meeting the Retail Grocers' Association passed a resolution of protest against the action of the canners in increasing the price of canned goods. The grocers claim that the crops of tomatoes and corn have been good. The canners were also blamed for unnecessarily closing down some canneries.

On the other hand the canners maintain that their action in closing down canneries was inevitable on account of the short crops.

The association also talked over the holding of a two-day district convention next year at the time of the grocers' picnic, and a committee was appointed to look into this and see if it is feasible.

As a mark of the association's appreciation of the work accomplished by J. M. Semmens, the chairman of the picnic committee, he was presented with a handsome morris chair.

NOW A GUILD MEMBER.

Picton Wholesaler is Notified That His Application Has Been Accepted.

Picton, Ont., Oct. 13.—Fred. Newman, wholesale grocer, has been officially notified that he has been accepted as a member of the Wholesale Grocer's Guild. He received notice that his application had been favorably considered and that with the forwarding of cheque covering admission he would receive his certificate. The cheque has been sent.

A TIME EXTENSION.

Manufacturers of condensed milk, etc. have been given an extension of time of three months from Oct. 1, in which to utilize their evaporated cream labels. The Department of Inland Revenue, Ottawa, have granted this.

J. L. Clark, of the Eastern Canning Co., Port Canada, N. B., is in Toronto. He expects to spend the next two months there on business.

The Markets—Decline in Corn Syrup and Starch

QUEBEC MARKETS

Sugar—Declined 10c.
Malaga table raisins—15c. higher.
Beans—Declined 15c.
Salmon—10c. higher and scarce.

Montreal, Oct. 13th.—The feature of the week is the continued downward trend of the sugar market. After the decline of last week it was thought perhaps there would be a momentary respite, but a second decline this week, combined with the continued declines in the raw market, shows that the end is not yet in sight. How far matters will go before any improvement takes place, it is hard to say, but certainly there is no danger of any advance for some time to come.

The arrival of the first Mediterranean fruit boat is awaited with eagerness, as already Malaga raisins have gone up, due to the first arrivals here.

Canned salmon is at a premium. Some lines are almost impossible to obtain, and the prices of others have gone up. Buyers are eagerly snapping up the few lots offered, and all future quotations have been withdrawn.

Sugar.—Sugar has again declined 10c. Even at this figure the market is so weak (raw) that it seems almost a certainty that the bottom may be lower still. As one dealer puts it, "we are apt to have United States sugar coming in, unless ample provision is made to meet their price on this side of the line." Almost every day sees a still further weakening of the raw market, and refined prices cannot keep to their present level in the face of this, unless something unforeseen turns up.

Jobbers say that their sales are becoming light, buyers evidently holding off. The combination looks very bad indeed for prices.

Syrups and Molasses—Of late the increase in the demand for syrups has been so marked as to call considerable attention to it. It is largely due to large country buying, and seems to have seriously affected the molasses trade, as dealers report that there is little sale for any but the fancy grade in this commodity.

Tea—There is a noteworthy improvement in China gunpowders this week. Japans continue to sell steadily, and at the same quotations as formerly. Ceylons might be showing better than they are, but still a fair amount of trade is passing. The market as a whole has become somewhat more settled down.

Spices—Again are the spice men reporting a busy week. This has become so much a habit of theirs through the summer that it is the exception rather than the rule when they report a falling off. Pickling spices are responsible in a large degree for the present state of things. Among other lines gingers and peppers show firmness, though no changes in prices have taken place.

Dried Fruits—The new malaga table raisins are on the market, and are quoted at a 15c. advance. So far they are the only line to appear here, but others are expected this week and the early part of next, when figures on them will be forthcoming. The cause of the advance is scarcity. It is stated that some inferior figs are being packed this year, and it behooves dealers to be very careful in buying. Dates are scarce, though no change has so far been made in quotations.

Nuts—The nut market continues on a firm basis, though no changes in prices have taken place. Evaporated Apples—It is thought that the new winter pack, when it arrives, will be held at higher prices than last year. In fact, this seems to be almost a certainty. The apple crop is short, and yet of such good quality, that there will not be many of the evaporating grades. tA present the market is very stagnant.

Beans and Peas—Beans are down 15c. This is due to a rather unexpected slump in demand, together with several large holdings having been placed on the market. It is thought that the lowest level to be reached for some time has now been arrived at.

CANNED GOODS

MONTREAL.—The canned salmon market forms the feature in the above market this week. There is an utter lack of supplies in Cohoes and Humpbacks, and prices in these lines would be soaring if there were any to sell. In Sockeyes and Red Springs prices are up. Even at the increased figure there is sufficient demand to hold the market firm, and another advance would not be at all unlooked for.

Fruits and vegetables are in good demand even at the recent advance. Prices in all lines are firm.

Some lines of meats are hard to get, notably tongue, veal, and chicken. Prices are fairly firm.

TORONTO.—From what can be learned among local jobbers there is considerable interest in the tomato market. The reported shortage in this year's crop together with the heavy demand have left some of the jobbers helpless. They are willing to turn in any direction if canned tomatoes will only beckon to them from that direction. It is learned that they are permitted to buy wherever they can get the supplies and they are even trying to buy from one another. In these latter cases only high prices have been mentioned and those that have any surplus stock are not particular about disposing of them now as they feel that higher prices are bound to prevail. One instance of a car load sold at a higher price than retailers have to pay is known and there is another in which the holder asked $1.25 just 12½ cents more than the present price to the retailer. The holder in the latter instance declared that he was willing to mark time rather than part with them at a lower figure.

Jobbers who are carefully following the canned goods market declare that low prices are in all probability a thing of the past. The west has grown to such an extent that the canners have not fully realized the increase in demand or if they have they were unprepared to supply it. This year's crop, of course, was a disappointment in many cases, but even with a full crop there is little question that it would soon have been wiped out. New markets are opening up in foreign countries and it is generally admitted that there is a great future for canned goods.

Salmon is decidedly firm and the whole market should be watched closely by the trade.

ONTARIO MARKETS

POINTERS—

Sugar—Another drop of 10 cents.
Syrups—Corn Syrup down 25 cents.
Starch—Decline of ¼ to ½c. a lb.
Canned Goods—Decidedly firm.

Toronto Oct. 13.—Lower prices in sugar, corn syrup and starch offer some consolation for the otherwise decidedly strong markets now prevailing. On Tuesday of this week sugar slumped another ten cents a total of twenty cents in a little more than a week. This action was anticipated on account of the weak situation in raw sugars. It may be said that even this latter slump has not improved the market to any great extent and another drop will not surprise the trade.

A decline of 25 cents a case in corn syrups was made public on Wednesday of this week simultaneously with a drop of ¼ to ½ a cent per lb. in laundry and corn starch. An immense yield of corn in the United States has weakened the corn market and affected the price of Canadian corn products.

Other markets are firm and are likely to advance. There is just a shade easier feeling in Valencia raisins and while some wholesalers take it as an indication of a general movement the majority look upon it as a temporary reaction following the high prices of last week when in the primary market raisins went to 33 and 34 shillings. Currants are quiet. California fruit is firm. A recent report from the coast states that the new fruit has been cleaned up closer than ever before and dried fruits of practically all kinds possess strength. In the Greek markets there is a disposition to shade price a little.

The "Bellona" of the Thompson line is expected to arrive in Montreal on Saturday direct from the Mediterranean, and as it will have a large shipment of dried fruits the situation here will be relieved to a certain extent. It is expected that she is carrying currants, raisins, olives, olive oil, wines, figs, dates and other articles of food.

Sugar—It has been expected for some time that refined sugars were about to seek a lower price level. The weakness of the raw sugar market was an indication of what was coming and a week ago a drop of ten cents was announced and again this week a similar decline was announced. The market shows some improvement under these conditions but the condition is not much changed from a week ago and another decline would not be very surprising.

Dried Fruits—Old stocks have been cleaned out to such an extent that they are practically all done and quotations are now offered on new stocks almost to the exclusion of the old. In the past in regard to dried fruit quotations with but one or two exceptions prices were quoted for old stocks because of the fact that the general feeling was unsettled. This was to be expected with the new crops coming to meet the old. Some jobbers were still depending upon their old stocks having had a better supply than others hence old prices were quoted. Conditions are becoming more certain. new goods are now ready for delivery and new prices are quoted in many cases. The dried fruit market is undoubtedly holding its own. Currants are rather quiet and raisins are a little easier but it is agreed that there is as yet no weakness and many hold that weak conditions need not be expected.

Winnipeg, Oct. 13, 1910.—In spite of the advancing prices in nearly all staple goods, merchants are buying freely and an active trade continues. Wholsalers are disappointed in the weak condition of syrup and are anxious to increase their output. With the exception of this commodity, and a temporary weakness in sugar, all other lines are strong and advancing. Travelers in every corner of the West report conditions everywhere favorable. There seems to be no dearth in the money market, and merchants are curtailing credit in a way that was never known before. Wholesalers are also making satisfactory collections and as far as western trade is concerned, everything is going smoothly.

Sugar.—Following the market conditions of Montreal and New York, sugar declined here 10 cents last week and another 10 cents this week.

Foreign Dried Fruits.—Valencia raisins advanced 5s. per 100 lbs. this week and the market is held strong. New stuff here is $2.50 per box, and a lower price is not anticipated. California raisins are up 1-4 cent. Although all these lines are held firm it is expected that lower prices will be quoted soon. The prune market is bare. and the future is not known, as it will be some time before lower prices can be quoted.

Coffee.—Green Rios is very scarce and the price to-day is 13½ cents per pound; 15 cents is expected to rule the market on coffee here in a few days.

ALBERTA MARKETS.

Calgary, Alta., Oct. 13.—Alberta is unfortunate in its location when the importing of apples is considered. The province is too far away from Ontario to enable dealers to pay freight from that eastern province, and then, too, the Ontario dealers pack No. 1 and No. 2 grades together, local dealers claim, and there is such a difference between the two that it does not pay to bring them out here for sale. The majority of the local importers get their apples from Washington state and the duty is forty cents a barrel, with heavy freight rates added. Thus about seventy-five cents is added to the price of each box (apples are imported from that state in boxes, altogether) and the consumer is charged this.

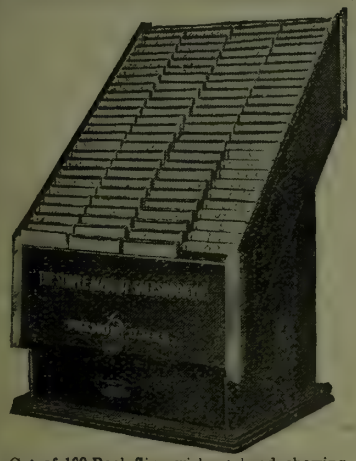
RED ROSE TEA

"is good tea"



Try it yourself; you will then recommend it.

By Leaps and Bounds

For 19 years Red Rose Tea has been the standard of tea quality in the Maritime provinces. Most merchants in the retail grocery trade in Ontario remember when Red Rose first came into this market 10 years ago. It did not take long to convince the trade that Red Rose Tea "is good tea," and since then its progress has been by leaps and bounds. It is to-day the recognized standard of tea quality in Ontario. It gives your customers better satisfaction, better value for their money than any other tea. That is why it pays you to push Red Rose Tea, to display it in your store and in your window and to recommend it personally to your best trade.

Supposing we were to say that there are 75,000 Keith Systems in use that probably would not be misstating the facts, but that would not convince you that you should have one.

Supposing we were to say the Keith System has been upon the market for the past 15 years, twice as long as any drop-leaf loose-slip system, and that it has been improved from time to time so as to meet every requirement of the retail merchant, we would be telling the truth, but that wouldn't be giving you any of the advantages of the system.

HERE ARE THE THINGS YOU WANT TO KNOW:

1. Is the Keith System Fire-proof? Yes.
2. Is there any danger of bringing forward a wrong past account or losing slips? No. The original slips remain permanently bound in the book, giving you a consecutively numbered record of the account, and only one account is before you at a time.
3. Can more than one clerk work over the register at the same time? Yes, any number, without the least confusion.
4. Will it place a check on forgotten charges? Yes, the best in the world.

NEW BRUNSWICK MARKETS.

St. John, N.B., Oct. 13, 1910.—The jobbers were not surprised last week when refined sugar declined ten cents per hundred pounds. They had been expecting it and also the decline of 10 cents on Tuesday, making 20 cents in two weeks.

In the provision line pork is high. Potatoes are also higher than at this time last year, selling at $1.25 to $1.50 per barrel. One shipment has gone forward to the Cuban market, which was such a factor in last year's business, and another steamer is expected to sail next week. Eggs are quoted from 26 to 30 cents a dozen. Poultry is high and butter is slightly cheaper. Canned vegetables are higher this year than last.

W. J. Wilson, of S. H. Ewing & Sons, Montreal, was in Quebec City this week.

The Canada Sugar Refining Co., Montreal, Ltd., are making rather extensive additions and changes in their plant.

G. S. Buchanan, of Buchanan & O'Hern, who was in Montreal recently, has returned to Quebec.

M. J. Hurley, grocer, Wallaceburg, Ont., who has been ill in the London hospital is recovering and it is likely will be back to business soon.

H. D. McCarty & Son, grocers, etc., Ingersoll, Ont., carried on a forced-out sale last week. They have had to make room for railway construction. They advertised the sale of $6,000 stock to be all sold at reduced prices in one day.

New Laid Eggs are Scarce and Prices are High

Dealers Have Had to Depend on Storage Supplies for the Bulk of the Demand—Retail Grocers in Some Places are Paying 35 Cents a Dozen for New Laids—The Butter Situation—Make is Still Good and Supplies Should be Liberal for Some Time Yet—Poultry Has Been in Heavy Demand—Easier Tone to Provision Market.

The past week has practically marked the appearance of storage eggs on the market, and as the result of the scarcity of new laids, and also of the demand for them, their price has gone asoaring. From 32 to 35 cents is the general price, with the latter ruling in Montreal. That means that consumers will have a tidy sum to pay for fresh eggs, even before the winter sets in, and during the coming season the price is likely to reach a high figure. There seems to have been a marked increase in the demand for eggs, judging by the business of the past spring and summer.

The weather up to the present could scarcely be improved, from a butter standpoint. The flow of milk has been steady and heavy, thanks to the splendid condition of the pastures. The result has been that butter is still heavily produced, and from the present, at any rate, there is no strong indication of upward prices. Of course, butter is likely to be advanced, but bullish tendency is not as great as might be expected. The market in the States is overstocked with a medium and undergrade creamery, and not being in a healthy condition is liable to break at any time. Should this take place, the Canadian factories that are now shipping cream will immediately turn to butter, and the market here would be overloaded.

The make of cheese has continued heavy right up to the last, although operations for 1910 are not yet concluded. Shipments of cheese have been large.

There has been a dullness in the provision market this week. Prices have been declining slightly, and among the list was compound lard. Supplies of hogs have been better, but the demand for the finished product varied in different places.

Poultry has been coming in freely, and especially during the past week has the demand been extremely heavy, owing to the demand from Jews, who have been celebrating their New Year's festival.

MONTREAL.

Provisions—Outside of a few minor changes in bacons and hams, all reductions, the feature of the provision market is a decline of ½ cent in all compound lards. Slack demand is the reason given. However, the generally lower tone of the provision market may have considerable to do with it. Trade has been picking up in most lines, and a brisk business is prophesied for this week.

Butter—In spite of the bear stories in circulation, the butter situation is as strong as formerly. There has, it is true, been a slight decline in the country, but this is only temporary, owing to a large make recently. Large shipments are going to the west almost daily, and the price obtained is a good one. Also the demand from that quarter is growing. Receipts for the week are 10,253 packages, as against 7,623 same week last year. For the season they are 360,593 packages, as against 319,735 same season last year.

Eggs—Sales recently have been heavier than the corresponding time last year. Eggs seem to be growing in popularity. It is to be hoped the quality of the arrivals will be bettered by the steps egg dealers are taking locally. Stocks are only reasonable here, and the situation looks strong. Receipts for the week are light, being only 2,396 cases, as against 2,564 same week last year. For the season they are 169,005 cases, as against 173,750 same season last year.

Cheese—Cheese prices are somewhat weaker in the country this week, but not sufficient to affect local conditions to the retailer.

Shipments during the past week are large, over 100,000 boxes. The figures are also to hand regarding the stocks in England at the present time. They amount to 363,000 boxes, the largest figure on Oct. 1st for the past ten years. It is feared this may have some weakening effect on prices. Receipts for the week are 67,142 boxes, as against 61,368 same week last year. For the season they are 1,635,868 boxes, as against 1,633,309 same season last year.

TORONTO.

Provisions.—A temporary shortage in the supplies of light and medium hams this week have sent the prices for these articles up a little. Supplies of hogs have been coming in a little more freely and as a result there has been a drop in the price at country and local points. Lard is stationary in price this week but there is a good demand for it. This market has been pretty steady during the past week.

Butter.—The closing of the cheese factories, according to one jobber, is not likely to have much influence on the butter market. The people have developed a preference for creamery butter and even if it may cost a few cents more than dairy they are willing to purchase it. The dairy may even be of good quality but the consumer seems to know that creamery is uniform in its flavor and they are unwilling to take a chance on the dairy make. Therefore, while the closing of the factories may have the effect of making the prices of dairy a little easier the general market is not likely to be affected to any appreciable extent.

Eggs.—New laid eggs are decidedly scarce and for that reason they are quoted at from 30 to 31 cents a dozen. All the houses have begun to draw upon their storage supplies which are said to be in good condition. There are those who want new laid eggs if it is all possible to get them, but henceforth they will have to pay a pretty stiff price for them as the scarcer they become the higher goes the price. It may be expected that new laids will advance steadily from time to time.

FOR THE CHILLY DAYS

Some of your customers no doubt have been led to think that Shredded Wheat is a "Summer food." Of course it is a Summer food—but it is just as wholesome, nourishing and strengthening in Winter—or in any other season.

Here's a hot dish full of warmth and strength, for a chilly day: Heat the Biscuit in the oven to restore crispness; pour hot milk over it, adding a little cream and a dash of salt. It is better for children or grown-ups than mushy porridges.

Shredded Wheat

is equally delicious in Fall and Winter with sliced bananas, stewed prunes, peaches or other fruits. Take a little time and tell your customers about it. It will please them and add to your profits.

Wheat Exports Still Remain Insignificant

Price is Too Low to Attract Canadian Farmers who are Holding Firmly to Their Stocks—Grain is Accumulating in the Western Elevators—Claim Canadian Wheat Superior to Russian and Other Grades—Ontario Wheat Prices Have Sagged, Resulting in Increased Deliveries—Heavy Demand for Rolled Oats and Mills are Busy.

There has been no appreciable change in the flour market during the past week. Prices remain as they were and the extent of business transacted is satisfactory. It has been asserted by some that flour is not likely to take another drop for a time for the reason that even now it is lower than the figures warranted by the ruling quotations for wheat. Millers state that at present they have no intention of changing the prices and there is no particular reason to believe otherwise.

According to one miller, keen competition was responsible to a certain extent for the recent declines and he claims that at the existing prices they are not getting enough to cover milling expenses and allow a half decent profit. Therefore in the event of a decline in the price of wheat there is not the same possibility of a lower price in flour, as the latter market is now ahead of what it should be. That is one opinion but it is by no means unanimous, and while it may be stated that there are no prominent signs of a movement in any direction one cannot depend on the wheat market, as it seems to prefer to make its changes unannounced. Ontario wheat is approaching the 80 cent mark and strange as it may seem the deliveries are more numerous than when the quotations were between 90 cents and one dollar. The conclusion is therefore that the farmer's waiting game is not always the best. When wheat is hovering around 90 cents the farmer sees visions of the dollar, but when it drops to 80 he fears a further decline to 75 cents and sells at the lower price, when but a short time previous he could have got from 90 to 95. This case has just been exemplified in Ontario, for winter wheat seems to have a tendency to sag to 80 cents and it is not far away from that mark now. But the farmer is no different from stock brokers and all other classes of men who when they get a good thing generally imagine that it is going to be better.

The demand for flour just now is brisk and bakers are giving it close attention. Canadian export trade has not yet reached an appreciable figure and the enquiries are for the most part not important. Russia and the Danubian districts continue to sell at lower figures than Canada, with the result that the British and foreign wheat markets are far from alluring to the Canadian grain grower, and consequently few consignments are leaving this country. So soon as reasonable prices are established again, the export trade of the Dominion will get into its stride.

At present it is a waiting game played by the grain growers for more tempting offers than those now prevailing. It is claimed that the majority of the grain grown in the European fields does not measure up to that now awaiting delivery in our upper lake storehouses. Some take the opposite view to the effect that our prices have to be reduced and there the matter stands with grain accumulating every day in the granaries throughout the west.

There is not much new in regard to rolled oats. Mills are working night and day with a heavy demand now felt. Oats have been a heavy crop. Market is normal.

MONTREAL.

Flour.—Export demand has been on the increase if anything, lately, and millers report good shipments during the past few days at firm prices. The firm state of the market has been helped greatly as well by the increase in local demand. Spot stocks are large at present, showing increases both over last week and over last year. It is thought that these will be materially reduced in the near future by several large shipments for export.

Rolled Oats.—Since the recent decline in bolted cornmeal there has been no further change in this market. Prices are firmer than last week, however, and there seems to be little immediate prospect of any weakening.

There has been a fair demand for export with some local trade. The figures are somewhat less than last year's nevertheless.

Flour.—Local mills are busy with flour in good demand. Deliveries are coming in freely and the market has a satisfactory tone. Prices are steady and millers assert that they do not anticipate any changes in the immediate future.

And this, Brother Grocer, is the only way to make money in selling flour—

THERE are just two ways of making money in retailing, viz.:

Small profits on big sales,
Big profits on small sales.

In selling Specialties, you seek the Immediate Profit, since your sales are inevitably limited.

In selling Staples, you must above all else consider the TURNOVER —the small profit oft repeated, compounded, so to speak.

Now, flour is the king of staples, consumed by every Canadian in a thousand forms of bread and pastry.

Your expansion of flour sales is limited only by one consideration:

Population, actual population and potential population.

Unfortunately, Brother Grocer, the profit on any one bag of flour is uncomfortably small.

It doesn't pay to sell one bag of flour—you must keep on selling until you have sold very many.

You must, while securing To-day's profit, not overlook To-morrow's good-will; a brand which gives one without the other is worthless, more than worthless, since it weakens your asset of public confidence.

Every customer dissatisfied is an irreparable loss, a vital stab in your pocketbook, more or less disastrous according to the number of customers you think you can lose without yelling for help.

Be it noted, however, that a disappointed client usually influences in favor of your competitor another prospective customer who might have been yours had you not lost his trade by antagonizing his friend.

So, you see, your competitor gets two new customers, and your turnover is reduced not only in actual trade, but possible trade.

Yet, Brother Grocer, all your flour profits must come from a Big Turnover.

If you can see it this way—and we defy any open-minded dealer to see it otherwise—you will without delay begin selling FIVE ROSES.

FIVE ROSES binds your present custom to you with the unbreakable ribs of Uniform Satisfaction.

FIVE ROSES influences towards you all the friends of pleased patrons.

FIVE ROSES helps a lot to get and hold the other fellow's discontented.

FIVE ROSES positively will increase your turnover, this we guarantee.

Since there is no other way to make money in flour sales, Brother Grocer—

New Florida Fruit Now Ready for the Market

Grapefruit Quoted at a High Figure and New Crop Oranges to be Received Shortly—Smaller Fruits are Becoming Scarcer, With Plums all but Done, and the Bulk of Peaches are Gone—Cranberries are Easier and Prospects Point to a Good Demand—Sweet Potatoes are Moving Steadily and Market as a Whole is Rather Satisfactory.

One of the features of the fruit market this week is the arrival of new Florida oranges and grapefruit, both of which will be coming freely in a short time. Oranges have only been sent along practically as samples, but they are ready for shipping and the market will soon feel their presence. Grapefruit from Florida have already arrived and are being sold on some of the markets.

The smaller fruits are passing. Plums are nearly all done and what few are left are bringing a high price. Pears are becoming scarcer and the peach market has seen better days. Grapes are receiving freely and are moving out at a fair price. It is expected that they will be fairly plentiful for Thanksgiving week. In fact the supply of fruit for that occasion should be sufficient.

Cranberries are a little easier and the whole market possesses a steady tone. Apples are a sort of a puzzle. Prices are already at a pretty high figure and it is expected that they will go much higher when conditions become settled and the dealers find out where they are at.

MONTREAL.

Green Fruits.—As yet the apple situation is too unsettled to arrive at any very definite conclusions as to the final price level. Apparently, from what sales have taken place so far, the market will likely be higher for winter grades than last year. Already as high as $5.25 per bbl. has been paid first hand for Spies, and Greenings are on a $4.50 basis.

Wild grapes are on the market in fair quantity, and are selling from 3 to 5c per lb. Preserving tomatoes are going very well at 50c a basket. Generally speaking the market is fairly active, and has been so for the past week. Cranberries are coming in freely and the price has sagged to $7. Pineapples are also easier.

Vegetables.—The vegetable market has been rather quiet during the past week. Still there have been one or two lines to hold their fair share of attention. Sweet potatoes are selling briskly and are hefd at firm prices.

Beans are also in good demand at former quotations. Reports seem to indicate that there will be none too many for this season's consumption. Arrivals from the country are numerous. All lines seem to have their fair share.

TORONTO.

Green Fruits.—The local fruit market's days as far as the present year is concerned are numbered. The season is fast drawing to a close and it will not be long now until the different companies are back to their winter quarters. The small fruits are still offered, that is what is left of them, but the heavy business is over. Crawford and Elberta peaches are practically done, although peaches seem to be of good quality. Pears are still going out and are bringing a good price. There has been a good supply of grapes and prices have been reasonable. The growers have been told that they have marketed their grapes too soon, and should have waited until the bulk of the peach crop had been sold before delivering grapes to a large extent. Apples are scarce, dear and in good demand. Everywhere high prices are already prevailing.

On Monday of this week a car of Spitzenbergs and other varieties was received from California by one of the local houses. They were packed in boxes and were particularly good eating apples. Before the day was over the entire car load had been disposed of. They brought from $2 to $2.50 a box.

Cranberries are a little cheaper this week and are not only selling in barrels, but also in boxes, the figure in the latter case being $3. Malaga grapes are arriving now and also Tokays. Plums have practically bade a last farewell for the season, and as the smaller fruits become scarcer, more attention is paid oranges and the rest of the old guard. A sample box of Florida oranges, the first of the new crop, arrived in the city this week for one of the fruit brokers. While the outer skin was green as the fruit was ripe inside. this being a peculiarity of this orange.

It will not be long now until the fruit is received here in regular shipments. Florida grapefruit are being sold on the market this week and are fine looking stock. There is a good demand for them. The lemon market is firm with not much change since last week. Cantaloupes are still offered and there is a slight demand for them.

Vegetables.—A steady trade in vegetables is passing. Tomatoes are still coming in rather freely, but the price has become much firmer. In some parts of the country potatoes are spoken of as a poor crop, but nothing serious has yet been announced in this regard. Onions are becoming more and more important and now occupy an important place on the market. There is steady demand for the smaller vegetables.

Peaches go to Great Britain in Good Condition

An important feature of the Niagara peach season this year has been the successful shipping of peaches to England. Great care was taken in their packing. They were put in shallow boxes and packed in wood wool, made from the ashen willow. The fruit and cars were precooled before loading. Altogether the quantity of peaches shipped was considerable, but the success of the efforts indicate the possibilities of this English trade.

It is reported that a number of Hamilton men are to form a company with a capital of $100,000 to handle peaches, grapes and apples for export. Arrangements are being made with a large concern in England to handle this fruit on a special commission. Only the choicest fruits are selected and shipped. Should this come to pass the tendency will be to higher prices.

Fish - Oysters

Conditions on Eastern Coast Have Not Permitted Fishing to Any Extent—Haddock and Halibut are Scarce and Should Situation be Long Drawn Out Higher Prices May be Looked for—Some Fairly Good Hauls of Mackerel Received This Week —Interior Markets Feel the Effects of Short Supplies—Oyster Season Improving.

Equinoctial gales and dog fish are again the causes of great scarcity in all lines of ground fish. Haddock and halibut are hard to obtain in any quantity. On the other hand, lake fish are coming in freely.

Reports of frozen Pacific coast fish are that the crop will be a little better than last year, and that the prices will probably be slightly easier, principally, however, for large contracts. This is important, in view of the eagerness of European buyers to place orders for frozen salmon now, and this new factor will be a decided aid in maintaining the present market level.

Cod fishing has improved in some localities, and the market is a little relieved of the recent anxiety. Moreover, news comes that Newfoundland intends to ship a couple of cargoes, which will be sufficient to fill all the requirements of this market.

Pickled salmon and lake trout are reported scarce.

QUEBEC.

Montreal, Oct. 13.—Local dealers say that the present market shows the most decided scarcity of ground fish (fresh) of all kinds, that has been the case since the present bad run has been in progress. The causes are the same as previously stated in these columns—dogfish ravages and heavy storms on the coast.

Haddock show particular scarcity, with halibut a close second. All fresh sea fish are firm, most of them being higher. With the fairly brisk demand evinced it looks as if higher prices would be the order of the day in the near future.

NEW BRUNSWICK.

St. John, Oct. 13.—The past week brought no relief in the situation as regards the scarcity of fresh fish. The past three weeks have been particularly hard on fish dealers here, as the fishermen from whom they have been receiving their supply have forsaken the usual lines and have been giving nearly all their attention to gathering in sardines, which have been abundant. This has been more profitable for the fishermen, but it has kept the local market bare. Dogfish continue to make great inroads on the store of cod and haddock, and the fishermen are much alarmed at the trouble they are causing.

A new turn was given to the strike inaugurated by the sardine fishermen last week, when the fishermen from down the bay agreed to sell their catches to the canneries for $6 per hogshead. In view of this the local men have also decided to sell at the same price, so that the canneries have scored a victory.

BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Vancouver, October 13.—One boat came in with 170,000 pounds of halibut at the beginning of the week, and it will be some time before the next cargo arrives. The fishing companies report that it is harder to get halibut, and that this condition is noticeable more all the time. Prices have not changed yet, though they will doubtless go up shortly. With halibut scarcer in winter, the query has been made if halibut go into deeper water at this season of the year, or change their habitation. Certainly they are not so plentiful. It may be, however, that the fish are being thinned out. This feature is the more probable for time was when halibut was caught in the gulf of Georgia, and that only since Vancouver became a city.

Fish shippers here are interested in the report from South Africa that there is a market open there for fresh frozen fish. While there is fish here for export, the absence of any cold storage boats operating between this coast and that part of the world prevents the dealer here taking advantage of the condition that is reported to exist there.

ONTARIO.

Toronto, October 13.—An annoying feature in regard to the fish market is the continued scarcity of supplies in most lines. Both lake and ocean storms have affected the fishing activities and stocks are limited. There is a good demand just now with improved business in cod, haddock, fillets and haddie. Oysters are not as plentiful as they might be and the price of standards has taken a little soar.

NOVA SCOTIA.

Halifax, N.S., October 13.—Mackerel struck in along the western coast of Nova Scotia this week and some good hauls were made. The appearance of these fish on the coast at the present time caused activity in fishing circles, as there is now a scarcity.

There was keen demand among the buyers for the fish, and the fishermen practically got there own prices.

Mackerel are very scarce on the Boston market, and over two hundred barrels were iced and shipped fresh. Only small quantities of the fish came on the local market. Those that did were retailed at 25 cents each.

The receipts of the other fresh fish were limited during the past week. Bait is scarce and the weather has been un-

You can do this—try it!

TOWARDS closing time on Thursday evening, October 6, one of Belleville's most prominent grocers received a shipment of Coast Sealed Oysters. While his clerk was transferring the oysters from the refrigerated container to the Coast Sealed Display Cabinet he commenced to make the telephone wires hum telling his best customers about those newly-arrived, delicious Coast-Sealed Oysters.

He was a little late getting home that night; but before going he had the satisfaction of knowing that nearly half his oyster stock was already sold.

That's the way to move oysters—don't wait for people to come in—hustle some and you will get them coming.

And Remember This—The sustained good quality of Coast-Sealed Oysters will increase the oyster business of any merchant who handles them. They are sealed at the coast, shipped in properly refrigerated carriers, and reach you just as fresh and delicious as when they were first drawn from the ocean bed.

Write us for particulars as to our proposition—it will pay you.

favorable for off-shore fishing. It is probable that the revolution in Portugal will, for a time, disturb the foreign fish market. At present there are two Halifax schooners at Oporto discharging cargoes. The prices of all dry and pickled fish are firm. The current price for Labrador codfish at Newfoundland this week was $3.50 per quintal. Some of the buyers, however, paid as high as $3.70 per quintal for the best made fish. This is the highest price paid this season for Labrador fish.

On the local market prices remain firm and unchanged. Some herring are striking in at coast points, and the idications are that there will be a fairly good run.

Have Fish Department Separated from Grocery

System R. Barron, Ltd., Toronto, Have in Use—Make Special Feature of Cleanliness—Interior of Sales-Room in White—Customers' Demands Anticipated and There is no Over-Stocking.

Toronto, Oct. 13—The grocer contemplating a fish department for his store can draw a certain hope for success from the fact that so many fellow grocers have made a success of this part of their business. The fact is that the grocer possesses certain advantages over others who handle fish because his store is the headquarters for so many household goods for which the women of the district must visit and visit it frequently.

Therefore, to begin with he has a following of customers who are often in his store and everything else being satisfactory he should be able to build up his fish department.

Have a Separate Department.

A number of grocers who have been successful with this feature of their bussiness have rooms entirely separate from the rest of their grocery stores. The principal reason for this is they claim if in proximity to many articles of food the fish will transmit a flavor that is not relished by consumers. Moreover, they say that the fish department can be made more attractive by devoting a special room to it as the fish can be displayed to better advantage. From every standpoint they say it is the proper plan.

This policy is well illustrated in the grocery store of R. Barron, Ltd., Yonge Street. Their fish business has grown to a large extent and the neatness and cleanliness of the department and of the method of handling fish, etc., is in itself a striking appeal to the customer who always approves of the utmost care in the handling of food stuffs.

A White Interior.

The sales room is entirely of white, the walls being of white tile, the window flooring of white marble and the whole presents the appearance of wholesomeness and unscrupulousness in the attention it receives. Along the walls are glass cases in which poultry is displayed and in the centre of the room is a marble-top table on which fish of practically all seasonable varieties are shown.

Whitefish, salmon trout, haddock, halibut, cod, haddie fillets and others are there. Only a few fresh fish were displayed while the rest were kept on ice in large boxes or tanks especially made for this purpose.

In the case of fresh fish the aim should be to know the demand that will be made on the department in order that the fish will be disposed of practically as soon as it is received. By selling it when it is fresh and before it has been long on ice, customers will develop a faith in the department which is one of the essentials to building up a fish trade. In summer extra precautions are necessary to safeguard the quality of the fish and it might be remarked that the white effect secured in Barron's department together with the tile and marble suggest a coolness which helps.

Anticipate The Demand.

By knowing the extent of the demand of fresh fish there is no holding over of stocks that are liable to deteriorate in warm weather if held too long. A hand to mouth business is preferable during that time.

Barron's fish department has grown to such an extent that they handle not only the ordinary fish that is asked for but practically all the delicacies in this line that are demanded by people who can well afford them. While the amount of fish they handle reaches a big figure still their summer trade in fresh fish is based on the same lines as those mentioned. They are enabled to keep in close touch with the demand upon the department, and this enables them to keep their stock fresh.

THE MACHINE SEWN BAG.

Machine sewn bags are coming into such universal use for all articles sold in large quantities, such as flour, salt, sugar, rice, etc., that the trade should by this time appreciate and impress upon their customers the advantages of these packages. They make a neat package, are economical for the manufacturers, thereby tending to reduce the cost of the article to the consumer, and as they are in almost every instance put up by large and responsible firms, full weight is guaranteed and the contents cannot be tampered with or exchanged for goods of an inferior and cheaper grade, because if a bag is opened after leaving the factory, it can be detected at once. The consumer, by following out the very simple instructions, can open the bag in an instant, as it simply requires the cutting of the chain at the side of the bag and pulling out the single thread. Should the wrong end be cut, it is only a moment's work to cut the other end and pull out the thread. If the end of the thread after being cut, comes out on the side of the double thead, it is only necessary to pull it through the bag with the point of the knife, when it will come out instantly. Once the simple knack of opening the bag is acquired, a machine sewn bag can be opened in a fraction of the time required to open a hand sewn bag, and the machine sewn bag will be found to be in a much better condtition and more salable than the handsewn bag.

TRADE NOTES.

Reamsbottom & Edwards, of Giroux Lake, Ont., near Cobalt, are opening a branch at Kelso, Mileage 222, where they will conduct a general store.

Jas. Forsythe, general merchant, Cochrane, Ont., who was burned out in the recent fire in that town, expects to occupy his new premises this week. The store is built about four doors north of his old stand, he having disposed of his former property to Chamandy Bros. for $1,200.

Hugh B. Hales has purchased the grocery business on St. Clair St., Chatham, Ont., formerly owned by H. Chiffin, who has gone into farming.

Thos. J. Primeau, formerly of J. W. Primeau, Chatham, Ont., has built a store on Taylor Ave., where he has opened out a stock of groceries.

The Catalogue Sharks Known to Davison Grocers

Lansing, Mich., Oct. 6.—The Michigan Retail Grocers and Merchants' Association is contemplating a credit rating system for all the grocers in the state, which will probably be completed at the present session. In discussing the matter State Secretary J. C. Percival foreshadowed the liklihood of some such step. He added, with reference to present conditions :

"Each city has its own system of credit rating. Some of the 60 members of our association have none at all, and others have a very good one. Lansing, for example, has a system, but it is unlike all the rest. The little town of Davison, near Flint, has about the best system of any place that I have yet heard from. They keep in close touch with the catalogue 'sharks' over that way, and if you see a man's name on their list with the letter 'C' after it and ask what that means they will tell you that the man cannot get any credit in town for the reason that he is a 'catalogue shark,' and sends all his ready cash away to some outside concern, and then, when he is broke, will go to the local retailer and ask for credit."

J. Redmond, Chatham, Ont., has purchased the grocery business lately owned by J. W. Wilson on Grand Ave. near the works of the Chatham Wagon Co.

INFORMATION FOR BUYERS.

Supplied to the Trade by Sellers.

The handlers of "Codou" macaroni will learn with pleasure that the addition to the factories of the manufacturers has been completed, and they will now be able to ship all that is required promptly. This firm has earned a splendid reputation for the quality of their goods, and their business has grown by leaps and bounds. They claim that it pays, however, to make first class goods much better than to make low grades. The outlook on macaroni products is for distinctly higher prices, owing to the great shortage of wheat suitable for the purpose.

The St. Croix Soap Manufacturing Co., St. Stephen, N. B., recently received a photograph from the northern wilds of Ontario, of a log cabin. This in itself is nothing out of the ordinary, but on the front gable end of the cabin is to be seen a large Surprise Soap poster. This cabin is situated at a trading post 200 miles north of the C. P. R. track in New Ontario, on Heathcote Lake near the transcontinental line. It may or may not be that their advertising man displayed poor judgment in trying to interest the wild animals of the north in soap. No doubt, hereafter they should be clean, even if they are not heavy users of this article. At any rate, it all goes to show what modern manufacturers are doing to extend the sales of their products.

E. R. Fuller & Co., pop-corn specialists, Windsor, Ont., wish to advise the trade that they will not be able to fill orders for holiday lines mentioned in their advertisement unless booked prior to, or between, Nov. 1 and Nov. 15. Jobbers should, therefore, anticipate their wants at once.

TRADE NOTES.

The McEown block, Saskatoon, Sask., in which is located Cave Bros., grocers, has recently been undergoing improvements. When completed Cave Bros. will have additional floor space, and will instal a meat market.

A retail grocer of Bracebridge, Ont., writes that the potato is likely to prove troublesome this year on account of rot. He advises dealers to be careful in stocking their winter's supply .

The B. Rothschild's Stores Co., Cochrane, Ont., are rising from the ashes of the recent fire and when completed, the store will be one of the handsomest and best equipped in New Ontario. They have already erected, in the rear, a large warehouse which is being utilized as a post office in the meantime.

Island of Trinidad the Land of the Humming Bird

Some Facts and Peculiarities About One of Canada's Sister Countries—What it Produces and Its Possibilities—Lake of Pitch, One of the Wonders of the Island—Comparison Between Canadian and U.S. Imports—Suggestions for Promoting Trade Relations.

By David Williams.

The island of Trinidad, the Pearl of the Antilles, as it is fondly called by its people, is one of the most interesting of the West Indies. The approach to the harbor is excedingly beautiful. As the steamer glides through either of the entrances great towering rocks loom up on each side presenting a grand and beautiful appearance. Along the sloping shore on either hand in little nooks and valleys are seen cocoa and cocoanut plantations, some of them creping up the sides of the mountains almost to their summits.

The Island, like most of the West Indies, has no docks, and vessels of large size have to anchor from a mile to two miles from the shore. Here a swarm of boatmen surround the steamer keeping at a respectful distance as they are not allowed to approach the side until summoned by an officer at the gangway. These ferrymen of dusky hue and strong lungs vie with each other in hailing each passenger that makes his appearance on the deck, calling out the number of their boat and soliciting their patronage to convey them ashore at two shillings—or as much more as they can get per head.

After the passenger, or group of passengers, have selected a boatman, he is allowed to come alongside the vessel. The travelers climb down a rickety stairway to the boat and are rowed ashore. Here another throng of negroes surround the unfortunate traveler wanting to convey him to his hotel or wherever he may be going.

Land of The Humming Birds.

Port of Spain, the chief city of the island, is a flourishing place containing about 60,000 people. It is quite a modern city being well laid out and liberally supplied with beautiful parks and some wide streets and avenues. It has many of the modern conveniences of civilization being lighted by electricity and has a fine electric street car system. It has also an excellent water-works system, the water being supplied from springs in the mountains behind the city. The island is situated in the southern part of the Caribbean sea on the east coast of Venezuela. It was discovered by Columbus on the 31st of July, 1498, when, like the greater part of South America, it became a Spanish possession until 1797 when it was ceded to Britain. Its former name was Jere, the land of the humming birds.

The island is about 55 miles long by 40 miles in width and has an area of 1,750 square miles. It is the largest but one of the West India islands. The population is about 280,000 of whom one-third are imported from the East Indies to work chiefly upon the sugar estates. Of the balance the large proportion are black or creole. The great bulk of the business of the island, however, is in the hands of the whites.

Trinidad's Chief Products.

The principal products are cocoa, sugar, cocoanuts and rum. The former is grown extensively all over the island both on large and small estates. In Port of Spain great storehouses are to be seen filled with bags of cocoa ready for shipment to Europe and America.

Sugar is also extensively manufactured and exported largely to Canada, while rum, a by-product of sugar, is quite an important item in the output of some of the sugar mills. Large quantities of cocoanuts are grown and exported. Cocoanut oil is also manufactured, there being a number of mills producing it. It finds a market chiefly among the islands.

The production of crude petroleum is a promising industry at the present time, a number of wells having been sunk showing excellent prospects while more are being drilled of which the promoters are sanguine of success. One English company has erected a tank with a capacity of two million gallons and some well-known Canadian capitalists are interested in the ventures. It is the hope of the promoters that this will at no distant date be one of the chief supply stations of the British navy for fuel oil.

One of Nature's Wonders.

Any description of Trinidad would be incomplete without some reference to its great pitch lake, one of the wonders of nature. It is a large lake miles in extent containing only pitch of good quality. An apparently inexhaustible supply lies quite close to the sea from where its product can be shipped to all parts of the world.

Considerable attention is being directed to the question of closer trade with Canada and the opinion is freely expressed among merchants that much more might be done on those lines than is at present. Almost every merchant and exporter spoken to were in favor of closer trade relations. The only question was as to the best means of promoting them. The granting of a preference to Canadian goods is viewed by many as a dangerous experiment and does not meet with much favor, not on account of any hostility to Canada but from the fear of retaliation on the part of the United States. It is however, claimed by some Trinidad merchants that if the United States follows their usual policy they will discriminate against them in any case just as soon as they feel assured they can do without their trade and find their requirements in their own country or in dependencies.

Visits From Canadian Houses.

In the opinion of Trinidad merchants much might be done to increase mutual trade between the island and Canada even under existing conditions. Some of the suggestions made are worthy of close consideration of Canadians. One thing suggested was more regular and systematic visits on the part of travelers representing Canadian houses.

It is said that most of the commercial men coming to the island are neither regular or systematic. It is often someone who is trying to combine pleasure with business and is frequently little acquainted with the lines he is endeavoring to introduce and does not properly understand how to present his house's claims to the parties to whom he is trying to sell goods. Being irregular in their visits, they are not able to make a proper study of local conditions and the requirements of the trade.

Shipped Butter In Wrong Way.

One result of this is that many of the details which may seem small but in reality go a long way in turning the balance are neglected or not understood. For instance, one merchant stated that not long ago some Canadian exporters tried to introduce their butter in the Island but with poor success owing to the fact that they persisted in shipping it in the same manner as they would to Europe or other northern countries. After conforming, however, to proper methods and putting the butter up in quite small and perfectly air tight tubs with sealed tops, their trade increased to large dimensions.

Another instance shown was that of the shipment of biscuits. Three boxes of biscuits were selected from prominent Canadian firms and from a U. S. shipper. In the two from the Canadian houses at least one-third of the biscuits were badly broken while in the American packages there was scarcely one to be found broken or damaged. These three manufacturers made biscuits of good quality, there being little difference in them, but it can readily be understood that any merchant would prefer the box with the unbroken biscuits. The whole trouble was in the method of packing and shipping. Much improvement might also be made along the line of prompt shipment and the keeping of stocks at convenient points so that orders could be immediately filled on receipt.

Subjoined is a list of the respective importations to the island from Canada, and the United States, taken from the official figures. But they are not entirely reliable owing to the fact that a considerable quantity of Canadian goods are imported through the United States and classified as exports of that country. The figures given are customs values in English pounds.

	From Canada.	From U. S.
Carriages and Motors	£ 232	£ 1,437
Leather, Boots & Shoes.	186	21,797
Soap	2,638	3,051
Cordage and Twine	1,373	2,667
Meats of all kinds	889	79,587
Meal	50	5,985
Butter	630	3,485
Cheese	110	5,861
Flour	9,159	213,423
Peas	5,922	4,586
Oil Meal	None	13,958
Potatoes	7,152	432
Lumber	6,724	32,425
Machinery	14	13,625

Although as said above those figures are not absolutely reliable so far as actual shipments are concerned, yet they are near enough to give a fair idea of what might be done in the way of stimulating Canadian trade and the carrying of goods under improved conditions.

It may be said further that Trinidad has by no means reached the limit of its productiveness. There are great areas of country that are still uncleared and uncultivated. Upon much of this land there is some of the finest timber to be found anywhere awaiting exploitation and manufacture. In fact the island affords many opportunities for the profitable and safe investment of capital in developing its latent wealth.

A GROCER'S CO-OPERATION

RISING SUN Stove Polish in Cakes gives a lustre which far outlasts all others under the heat of the stove, and that is why it has so many friends that call for it over the grocery counters the world around. We believe that the real live grocer wants to push the goods that please his customers, and that is why we have the hearty co-operation of thousands upon thousands of grocers everywhere. It pays you to push it.

2 IN 1
Shoe Polish

The Polish OF Preference

It pays to handle a quick-selling line like "2 in 1" Shoe Polish—a line that's always in demand and that always gives satisfaction.

"2 in 1" is positively waterproof, preserves and softens the leather, does not clog or stain the clothes, and is free from acid or turpentine.

Get a generous supply and display it well.

"We have been advertising in The Canadian Grocer for a number of years, but never realized the good work you are doing——until last fall, when the writer took a business trip through the Northwest and British Columbia."

The above paragraph is taken from a letter written by the manager of a well-known Hamilton firm. Formerly he was inclined to judge all advertising according to the direct returns it produced. Now he realizes that such returns are merely incidental to the real value of most advertising. In further reference to his western trip he says:

"Your paper seemed to be well thought of by the retail grocers, and many of them, especially in Vancouver and Victoria, took the trouble to mention that they had seen our goods advertised in The Grocer.

"This was appreciated by us, as it is rather difficult to know just what class of advertising is giving us results. However, we are now satisfied that your paper is an excellent medium for any manufacturer to use who wants to talk business to the wholesale or retail grocer of Canada."

A GREAT BRITISH INDUSTRY

In the extreme northeast of Scotland a great business is conducted, about which the general public or the trade have very little real knowledge.

The herring fishing industry employs thousands of men and women and hundreds of thousands of pounds capital, and it has the distinction of being entirely British throughout!

Messrs. Maconochie were pioneers in this herring trade a generation ago, and all through the years between they have maintained their place as the premier house engaged in it.

Their splendid factory is situated at exactly the right spot on the coast where the finest herrings are caught and landed, and so marvellous are the arrangements that herrings which are swimming in the sea in the early morning are safely sealed in the Maconochie tins early in the afternoon.

Cleaning and Splitting Herrings at Maconochie's, Fraserburgh

Such perfection of management and celerity of handling is the result of a whole long life's experience, and the constant employment of all the most modern improvements that science discovers.

Under such circumstances the Maconochie herrings retain all the inimitable freshness of the flavor of the salt sea breezes, and they enable people who live in towns to enjoy fish under the same conditions as the fishermen themselves, who have them straight from the net to the table.

PURVEYORS TO HIS MAJESTY THE KING

Maconochie's Fresh Herrings and Herrings in Tomato are a very attractive proposition from the retailer's point of view.

There are no articles in grocery stocks which show better results than these herrings, and they provide an excellent and most economical meal, as sustaining as delicious; and again, it is well to bear in mind that the herring holds pride of place amongst all food products, for, in the opinion of the highest medical and scientific authorities, "there is more nutriment in a pound of herring than in a like weight of sole or turbot, and, value for value, it is very much better than the best beef or mutton."

A Faultless Product

¶ There is no better factory in the world adapted solely to the production of Macaroni and similar pastes than that of Felix Codou in Marseilles, France. Every modern appliance is there—it is scrupulously clean—the original has been enlarged several times to meet the steadily increasing demand from particular people.

Codou's Macaroni

¶ Vermicelli, Spaghetti, Fancy Letters and Figures, as well as Macaroni, are the specialties produced—each one has a national reputation for high quality.

Taganrog Russian Wheat is used exclusively—the wheat that yields the BEST results—the wheat that is peculiarly adapted to the desired purpose. "Codou's"—that is the name to think of when the best is wanted.

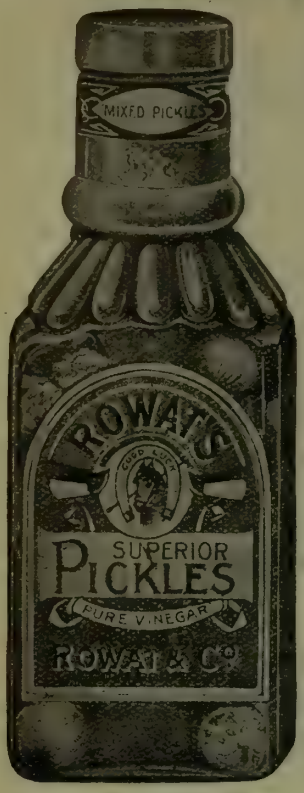
You make better profits on the better grade peas

INSTEAD of selling imported French Peas to supply the demand for better grade peas, sell our Extra Fine Sifted (Petits Pois) Sweet Wrinkle Extra Sifted and Early June Sifted.

Not from sentimental or patriotic reasons, but because they will yield you a better profit, give your customers much greater satisfaction and help to increase the demand for the more profitable higher grade peas.



That vivid green color which makes some lines of imported French Peas look so pretty is produced by Sulphate of Copper—a chemical that is not only very injurious to health, but which kills the true flavor of the peas.

We never use sulphate of copper or any other coloring chemicals in our canned peas.

Extra Fine Sifted (Petit Pois), Sweet Wrinkle Extra Sifted and Early June Sifted are thoroughly sterilized, the very pick of the pack, fine, tender, and of exquisite flavor.

You can materially increase your profits and your reputation by pushing these lines. Try it.

FACTS ABOUT ADVERTISING

By The Advertising Manager

VII

"Advertising by itself does not pay."

This is the opening sentence in a magazine article written by a well-known advertising agency. It goes on to say:

"You can increase your business by advertising just as certainly as you can increase your chest measurement by exercise; but advertising alone will not do it.

"You can build your body up by exercise, but not if you neglect diet, sleep, fresh air, and the other essentials; and just as exercise is only one of the factors in body-building, so advertising is only one of the factors in business-building. You can't revolutionize your business or make any real progress just by slapping in a few ads."

Let us say that a wholesale grocer advertises through this paper every week, and dwells particularly on his facilities for prompt filling of orders, quick shipments, etc.

He seeks to impress the trade with the fact that his travelers may be relied upon always to co-operate with the dealer, with the constant, earnest desire to look after the dealer's best interests.

The weekly advertisement has the value of a heart-to-heart talk between this wholesaler and the thousands of good dealers he is able to reach through The Grocer.

Yes, it will have that value, if every branch of the wholesaler's business is in accord with the spirit of the advertising—

—if the wholesaler himself resolves that his service shall be everything he promises—

—if it is hammered home to the travelers that they are expected to make good on what the advertising says—

—if the shipping department, accounting department—every last man in the whole establishment—is imbued with the idea that the house has set a high standard for the service it is to give, and he must live up to it—

—then the advertising will pay, and pay well.

Then the advertising has a real meaning to every dealer who reads it.

The advertising becomes institutional—that is, it really reflects the driving idea that is behind all the operations in every department of this business.

That sort of advertising makes a mighty strong appeal to the dealers whose accounts the wholesaler is after.

The dealers will always give a good reception to the travelers for a house of that kind.

They can't help feeling the personality back of it all—the personality of the man who is trying hard to win their trade——by that route which must be traveled by every successful man—the route of service.

They feel that here is a man who will appreciate their business thoroughly——and always endeavor to maintain a high standard in the handling of it.

Such a feeling has a big influence in the getting of new accounts—and the holding of old ones.

Always see that your advertising is institutional.

And remember that advertising by itself does not pay.

"Not Many Years Ago I Owned a Store in Wentworth County," Said a Haileybury Merchant the Other Day

"I had a splendid trade, but I never could tell where I was financially. The greater part of my stock was in bulk. Each year I lost heavily by carrying slow-moving goods. Some of the stuff actually appeared on two or three stock-taking sheets."

"My customers complained, until finally I decided to try each line in the store myself. Until then I never realized what uncleanliness and deterioration my goods had gone through. Dust, dirt, dampness, sunlight, odors, handling and even insects had done considerable injury. Worst of all was my tea. I resolved to cut clean away—to start over again. I sold out and bought this store."

"Look around," he said. "No slow-movers here." Everywhere were bright, clean, attractive goods that bespoke active trade. "I no longer buy tea in bulk. Instead, I buy "SALADA" and avoid waste."

"It's an advantage to have a customer enter my store, quickly recognize the tea she knows, confident of its quality and value—confident that it will satisfy her."

"It's an advantage to hand her, quickly and promptly, a clean, neat, sealed lead package."

"It's an advantage to carry a small stock—always fresh—to do more business on less capital and make quicker profits."

"It's an advantage to know that my interests are protected—that no peddler can sell 'SALADA.'"

"I want to know what I buy before I buy. When I buy 'SALADA' I have the advantage of certainty."

Increased His Profits on Many Staple Articles

Some Reasons Given Why Selling is of More Importance Than Buying—There is a Bottom Buying Price to Many Articles and Margin Between Buying and Selling Price is Often too Narrow—Selling Tea, Cereals and Spices to Get Bigger Profits.

By Henry Johnson, Jr.

I seem to hear somebody object to my condemnation of the "well-bought-half-sold" saying, on the ground that the merchant must always look out for his margins. True; but that is an elementary faculty and one to the development of which far too much time and attention is now devoted. It is the most obvious point about any transaction that every cent you can shave off of cost is apt to be added to your margin, and that shaving in this way is very desirable. The trouble is that too much valuable time is devoted to dickering and too much thought is given to a matter of the two-plus-two character. It is so rudimentary a proposition it should be disposed of in a jiffy; and moreover, a quick buyer will dispose of it just that way.

Bottom Prices Established.

As a matter of fact, there are two prime conditions in this buy-and-sell game which are pretty much fixed quantities. One is, that the bottom price on most groceries is quite well established and known. The other is, that the margin between buying and selling is really too narrow. These are the fixed conditions with which we have to cope. And, seeing that the cost is well established on the general run of groceries, our business is to become sellers to the last limit of our capacity, so that the margin which cannot be increased by lower buying can and will be augmented by higher average selling.

There is another feature I want to cover, very briefly, right here. That is, that one danger of trying to become "better buyers" is that the factor of price assumes undue importance; and we are very apt to begin selling at lower prices to give ourselves a fancied advantage over the man who does not buy so closely, thus depriving ourselves of the very margin we had thought to increase by our acumen and ingenuity.

Danger of Overloading.

Another danger is, that we are more than likely to be tempted by the illusive and deceptive reputed advantage of the "quantity purchase," thus overloading ourselves, losing interest, accumulating stale stocks, carrying has beens, cluttering our shelves with odds and ends, and so on. Johnson & Son buy a certain line of cereals with their neighbors in 25 case lots and thereby get the jobbers' discount; but there is a well-established understanding that the full retail price will be adhered to. That price has not been departed from during upwards of eight consecutive years since the arrangement was made, with the result that each of us gets an additional 10 p.c. and none of us carries more than a normal stock of the goods. Furthermore, the success of this deal has led to our making others equally advantageous; which is a legitimate and worth-while exercise of the buying power.

But to get back to Selling Power. The capacity to buy being limited by certain fixed conditions, the good merchant will continually exercise his faculties on the work of extending the sale of profit-paying lines. He will also study his business from all standpoints to devise ways and means to add to his margins from the Selling end of his problem. And the thoughtful merchant will gather hints and suggestions from everywhere—because his mind will be "running on the problem all the time."

More Money for Extra Work.

The computing scale man wanted to illustrate to me the difficulty of giving proper value to my customers. He used as an illustration the difficulty of giving a customer 10 cents worth of 35 cent tea and felt he had scored a point when he showed that his scale would enable me to give exactly 10 cents worth. But he gave me a very valuable hint which he had no thought of giving. For I came back at him with the statement that no customer who asked for 10 cents worth of 35 cent tea should get it, and in strict justice, could not get it, because he was in no way entitled to it. To do business that way would compel me to do three and a half times the work, with four different transactions, at four times the loss of paper and twine, to sell the same amount that I sold at one time for 35 cents. I told him I had always given ¼ pound of that tea for 10 cents and expected to continue to do so.

After he left, however, I thought further along the same line and it occurred to me that the principle that applied to tea should also apply to ¼ pound of pepper and all other spices and other bulk goods frequently sold in quantities less than a pound. The result was that I revised all my selling prices on those goods. I marked my whole black pepper 20 cents a pound; 6 ounces for 10 cents and 3 ounces for 5 cents.

Bigger Profit on Pepper.

My ground pepper I marked 35 cents a pound; 4 ounces for 10 cents and 1½ ounces for 5 cents. I had been carrying the old style, round, full weight ¼-pound tin of pepper which was sold for 10 cents. I got rid of that and put in a nice line of ⅛-pound tall, square, attractive tins, to sell at 10 cents. I was careful to get the best quality always, knowing that such quality was the kind to sell since that would give greater satisfaction than a larger quantity of a lower grade, and I materially increased my margin. Thus, the computing scale man had done a certain kind of good to one merchant which he had made no conscious effort to do.

Selling Power of Good Goods.

Good goods will win and are always salable at good prices. Note that I say SALABLE — not purchaseable. Never be afraid of asking a price for the right kind of goods. That is Selling, as opposed to buying. If you are offered some new, but apparently meritorious line, which promises you a margin of 30 p.c.—on sales—which means about 43 p.c. on your delivered cost, study it and, if it is based on right lines, do not be afraid of it simply because you will have to SELL it at a price higher than others are getting.

If the article appeals to you as worthy, you can make it appeal to your trade the same way; and increase your SELLING efficiency thereby. Do not wait until others have tried it out; for, if it is right, then by the time others have proved it, your opportunity will be gone; its sale will no longer give you any particular distinction. Be first; do not fear to lead—there are always plenty of followers; and, like all followers, they end the procession.

Room at the Top.

This is not any "easy" road to travel. No accomplishment worth while is easy. The lines of least resistance are followed by all. It is the enterprising merchant—the SELLER—who makes true progress. And the work ceases to be drudgery almost from the first. It becomes a pleasure, a fascination, a happiness; for it is accomplishment, the greatest thing any man can devote his time to. This line of work makes the business a broadening occupation and puts each merchant into the professional class; up among the skilled workers. The pioneer is the man who sees the primeval country from the mountain tops, "where foot of man has ne'er or rarely been." Make no mistake; there is room at the top.

A reader in Ridgeway, Ont., asks me how I figure that an article costing $1.50 per dozen and selling at 15 cents each pays only 16 2-3 p.c. I get my result from the fact that the 30 cents profit is 1-6th of WHAT I RECEIVE for the goods; and 1-6th is 16 2-3 p.c. There is only one kind of "investment" in our business, and that is the SELLING PRICE. Therefore, the question is, what portion of what I GET is profit. To make 20 p.c., 1-5th of WHAT I RECEIVE must be profit. To make 30 p.c. 3-10ths of WHAT I RECEIVE must be my margin. Think it over; digest it. This is the law of the profits.

The retail grocers' association of Norfolk, Vt., has been in existence but four weeks and already they have quelled the peddler nuisance after having stirred the police into activity. They have over sixty members and are about to establish a credit bureau.

A Special Display Suggestion for Hallowe'en

The Pumpkin Recalled to Memory—Other Articles That Might be Used Appropriately—Value of Watching Different Seasons With a View to Special Window Displays—Gives the Store a Distinction—Only One Week Remaining Before Hallowe'en.

The last day of October is always set apart for the celebration of that time-honored occasion known as Hallowe'en. This is always a festive time and since this year Thanksgiving day will be celebrated on the same day, it will be doubly so.

Associated with Hallow'en is the modest pumpkin. Every one, and particularly the small boy, unites the two in his mind, and the pumpkin can therefore be appropriately used by the grocer in his window trimming operations for this occasion.

In the accompanying illustration therefore is a suggestion for a Hallowe'en window trim. The pumpkins which suggest the faces of human beings can be placed on posts, the latter being hidden by shocks of corn.

Fruit, vegetables, nuts, etc., are also always associated with the Hallowe'en and Thanksgiving seasons and can be used with good effect. The drawing suggests apples, squash, and chestnuts piled symmetrically between and around the posts holding the pumpkins. It might be termed a Harvest Festival window and undoubtedly would appeal strongly to passers-by.

Watch Cycle of Seasons.

Every merchant who carries on business on a scientific basis realizes the importance of selling, showing and advertising seasonable goods. They pay particular importance to the cycle of seasons and to prominent happenings. They take every opportunity of selling appropriate goods and getting new customers through up-to-the-minute methods.

This should be an aim of all merchants. If dealers who have lost customers will make it a point to get at the base of the trouble, they will frequently find that the cause lies in the fact that their competitors are using more modern methods—enticing displays, better service, better quality, newspaper space a cleaner store—than they themselves are.

To "be up with the times," is a phrase worth studying for it means a great deal in window dressing. If therefore the grocer has not been paying as much attention to this particular method for attracting business, let him begin with Hallowe'en.

Windows uniquely dressed all the time give the store a distinction over its competitors. Very soon people notice this and they propogate the news rapidly.

A window such as the one described above will be particularly appropriate in a village, town, or small city in the midst of a good farming community. Nevertheless it is sure to attract interest in a mining section where such goods are seldom seen in any quantity.

One Week Left.

Next week is the time for a Hallowe'en or Thanksgiving window. Any later will denote an unprogressive merchant.

It ought also to be remembered that as soon as Hallowe'en is over the window should come out. If it doesn't, the idea will be conveyed that the merchant is lazy.

If any retailer has any good photographs of Hallowe'en or Thanksgiving windows, The Canadian Grocer would be pleased to enter into negotiations to effect a loan.

Hallowe'en and Thanksgiving Both Fall on Oct. 31 this Year—Suggestion for a Window Trim.

CAN ANYTHING BE DONE?

Editor Canadian Grocer.—We think it is not fair to the retail grocer for our daily papers to quote the wholesale price on sugar, as the paper goes direct to the customer and he therefore knows exactly what the sugar costs the retailer.

Can there be any remedy?

PROGRAM MAPPED OUT.

Ottawa Retailers to Make Their Meetings Particularly Instructive.

Ottawa, Oct. 20.—The Retail Grocers' Association, which holds its meetings on the first and third Mondays of the month, have arranged for the winter to have every second meeting one of particular interest and instruction. On Monday the first of these was held when the meeting was addressed by N. Cauchon, the C. P. R. engineer, on the proposed tunnel scheme of the city, and the benefits it would bring to the merchants. The meeting was open to the Retail Merchants' Association, whose president, Henry Walters, occupied the chair.

H. C. Beckett, of W. H. Gillard & Co., Hamilton, Ont., was in Montreal this week.

Hugh Blain, of Eby-Blain Ltd., Toronto, was in Montreal for a few days recently.

Vancouver Advertisement Out of the Ordinary

Introduction Different From Tho se Generally Written—If Smaller Type Had Been Used, More Space Could Have Been Utilized in Body of The Ad.—Talk About Pears Might Have Been Featured—Lines Too Close and Confusing to the Eye—Naming of Prices in Heavy Type a Good Feature.

Retail advertising in the newspapers is becoming more and more general in Canada. There is no reason why it shouldn't, since the big stores which have made outstanding successes have depended for their publicity to a large extent upon this medium. Therefore the only course left for smaller stores which wish to attain success to any degree seems to be that they should follow the example of the big leaders.

There are those who have attempted advertising in the newspaper and who have not or believe they have not found it to be profitable. The big advertisers will say it's the fault of the copy and the way it is displayed. And they are usually correct.

The accompanying advertisement from a Vancouver paper illustrates somewhat of a departure from the regulation style and it is worthy of attention. The average advertiser might say that the introduction "Spencer's Grocery Bulletin," consuming such a big space was superfluous and that it would have been better to have introduced the ad. with reference to the peaches which as is stated were difficult to obtain.

But if the introduction is used every day it is likely to be sought after by the housewife providing she has learned to expect something of value in the Spencer ad.

Suggestion for Improvement.

But granting this value there is, many will say, too much white space used for this heading. The same effect and the same value, they will maintain, could be secured by smaller type, leaving more space to enlarge on the peach question.

If the advertisement had begun "Last Call for Peaches," in heavy type, followed up by the talk about the ending of the season and the price, there seems no reason why it would not have secured extra good results.

A good feature of the ad. is the quoting of prices. and the short talks about some of the articles named. The list is somewhat confusing to the eye, and if space had been left between the lines, and less used in the heading, a better effect would have been accomplished. The capital letters used in the names of the articles is also rather confusing. But this, of course, is not the fault of the writer of the copy, unless he so directed it.

Editorial Note.—The Canadian Grocer solicits ads. from its readers for criticism, which will always be given according to the honest convictions of the ad. critic.

SUGAR POPULAR IN THE U. S.

During the fiscal year just ended the consumption of sugar in the United States reached the enormous figures of 7,500.000,000 pounds, an average of 82 pounds of sugar for each person. This means that each person was responsible for the consumption of about seven pounds every month which is surely a strong evidence of a national sweet tooth.

Association Favors Raise in the Price of Soap

Would Prefer This so That It Would Have to be Sold at 5 Cents Straight, Instead of 6 for a Quarter—Toronto Retailers Discuss the Matter—They Decide not to Join With Grocers' Section R. G. A.—Canned Goods Prices Not Uniform—Is the Salmon Supply More Than Adequate?

Toronto, Oct. 20.—Costs and profits were again the subjects before the Toronto Retail Grocers' Association, at their regular meeting on Monday night. Among others, the cost and profit on soap was discussed. President D. McLean was in the chair.

The question arose as to whether it would be better for the retailer if the soap manufacturers raised the price of soap to him so that all retailers would have to sell it at 5 cents per bar straight or whether they should reduce the size of the bar and the price in order that a better profit might be made in selling 6 for a quarter.

Fred Thorn was in favor of an advance in the price to the retailer to say $4.05 or $4.10 so that soap would retail at 5 cents straight. At $4.10 the dealer would receive a profit of 18 p.c. on the selling price or about 22 on cost.

Wanted Reduction in Bar.

J. M. Cork, College St., was opposed to this plan. He claimed that the 6 for a quarter price had now been so well established all over the country that it would be folly to change it. He believed in reducing the size of the bar and the price to the retailer. Jno. Blood suggested that if this were done, some would reduce the retail price to 4 cents, and that the big departmental houses would sell soap 7 bars for a quarter.

Mr. Cork replied that it might be done for a time, but these big stores wouldn't carry it on very far if they knew they were losing money. "It costs them a great deal more to do business than it does one of us," he said, "so they've got to get their profits." He maintained that if the retail price were maintained as it now is that there would be less confusion in dickering with a purchaser telling her that soap had gone up, etc. "I think the public demand 6 for a quarter," he said.

D. W. Clark said not. He maintained he could sell his customers soap at 5 cents straight without any difficulty. He had often sold the large 3 pound bar in preference to the 6 for a quarter. "I don't consider I get enough profit on soap at 6 for a quarter, and I advise my customers to purchase the long bar," he said. "I'm working for myself and not the manufacturer," he declared with emphasis amid applause.

He maintained that he had little difficulty in selling his customers even if prices go up or down. They usually know of declines and advances and if sugar goes down they expect a pound more on the dollar. The same with advances, people know them and he didn't have to argue.

"When a woman telephones you have seldom time to tell her much," said Mr. Cork; but Mr. Clark stated that he would simply fill the soap order with 5 bars and if there was any arguing to be done she would begin it and the matter would be satisfactorily ended.

Mr. Cork—"If we pay $4 or $4.10 the department store will buy a car load cheaper and sell 6 for a quarter still."

Mr. Clark—"There ought to be an understanding that this should not be done."

Mr. Cork.—"There'll be less trouble if we sell it 6 for a quarter."

Mr. Clark—"And less money."

Make Sure of No Cutting.

Jno. Blood suggested that the price be raised to the retail trade to say $4.25 for a while. This he maintained, would be sure to make every retailer get into the habit of selling soap at 5 cents straight. Then in two or three months time reduce it to $4.10.

R. Van Loan favored reducing the size of the bar and the price.

A vote was finally taken on the question, the majority declaring in favor of the raise in price rather than a cutting down of the size of the bar as well as the price.

Voted Against Amalgamation.

It will be remembered that in the issue of The Grocer of Oct. 7 there was an item re the proposed merger of the Toronto R. G. A. and the Grocers' Section of the R.M.A. Each was left to discuss the matter separately at its own meeting and on Monday night the former threshed the matter out.

D. Bell, J. S. Bond and W. C. Miller, who had attended the joint meeting reported what had been talked over. Several proposals had been made including a compete amalgamation; the Toronto R. G. A. joining the Grocers' Section R. M. A.; the Grocers' Section R. M. A. joining the Toronto R. G. A.; the two uniting at each other's meetings to talk over specific questions, and a joining of forces whenever any legislation matter came up.

The first two mentioned were not considered seriously, but the third and fourth promoted much discussion. It was finally moved by D. Clark and W. C. Miller that the Grocers' Section of the R. M. A. be invited to unite with the Toronto R. G. A.

This was opposed by D. Bell, Thos. Clark, Bailey Snow, R. Van Loan, F. Johnston and others, and upheld by T. Clark, J. S. Bond, W. C. Miller and J. M. Cork, but the motion was defeated which means that so far as amalgamation is concerned, the Toronto R. G. A. has dropped the question. Almost all those who spoke on the question felt that, since their association was older than the other, if there was to be any change the other should come to them.

Wasting Raw Material.

While on the subject of amalgamation, J. S. Bond in referring to the necessity of a strong association intimated that there were manufacturers who were wasting raw material in order that prices might be kept up. "We ought to be strong enough to go to Parliament and have this thing stopped," he declared.

R. Matthews, Yonge St., brought up the canned goods question again. "We shouldn't have to order canned goods ahead," he said, "and tie up a lot of money."

W. C. Miller stated that salmon, peas and corn were being retailed in the city at several prices. There were some selling salmon at 18, 20, and 22 cents and halves at 11, 12, 13 and 14 cents. Canned peas were retailed at 10 and 12 cents and some at 3 for a quarter. He thought that there ought to be more uniformity in the prices.

R. Van Loan suggested a black board on which costs and selling prices could be figured out.

Is There Plenty of Salmon?

One of the members pointed out that so far as he was concerned there was plenty of salmon on the market and advised carefulness in buying as his order had been duplicated by a wholesale house. He returned it and was afterwards told that he could purchase salmon whenever he wanted to without fear of prices going up. He only took two cases and intends stocking according to his current requirements. It was generally felt that salmon would not advance the 2½ cents on Dec. 21st.

Another retailer advised taking care of boxes. He had had some demands recently from 3 firms wanting to get them.

CUSTOMS AGENT FOR BRITAIN.

H. S. Scott, until lately the representative of the Canadian Customs Department in New York, has been sent to London in the capacity of the same Department's chief agent for Great Britain and the Continent of Europe. On account of the increasing volume of exports from the United Kingdom to Canada, and because of the large Continental element in much of the merchandise coming from the United Kingdom to Canada, it has been deemed necessary to have a special agent of the Canadian Customs Department in London. The question often arises whether a given shipment from the United Kingdom is entitled to admission into Canada at the preferential duty rates. The product that is finished in Britain may have received all but the final touches in Germany, Austria, Belgium or some other country not entitled to the benefit of Canada's preferential tariff. The rule made by the Minister of Customs is that 25 per cent. of an article's value must have been added by fabrication in the United Kingdom or other British possessions entitled to the preference to make it eligible for admission at the preferential rate.

It is asserted that there has been some sharp practice on the part of Continental manufacturers and their British agents in order to get their goods the advantage of admission into Canada as British goods. The new agent is expected to check this form of customs fraud and also to facilitate the entry of genuinely British goods at preferential rates. His duties have also in some measure been made for him by recent commercial treaties between Canada and some other nations, notably France, Germany, Italy, Belgium and Holland. These countries are to get the benefit of the treaty rates not only in goods shipped directly from their own ports to Canadian ports, but also on goods they send by way of the United Kingdom. To watch this class of commerce will be part of the new agent's business.

LEAKING OUT OF TRADE SECRETS.

There is frequently a disposition on the part of business men, and political men as well, to regard the presence of a representative of the press as one of their meetings or conferences with dubious feelings. If they know that there is such a person in their midst he must be ejected before any business whatever is transacted.

This has been proven time and again to be erroneous. For it is just such acts that form the basis of the "big" stories in the newspapers which "allege," "report" and "rumor" that such and such a thing is true or that some person said this or that and which sometimes cause no end of trouble.

Even if these conferences deal with matters which the trade or daily newspaper should know in order that its columns can be more efficiently edited, there is often a disposition on the part of some to secretly conduct proceedings. positive in their own minds that nothing will ever leak out, not even the fact that a conference was being held.

They are generally in error and particularly so in the case of a trade paper whose representatives have usually a hundred and one avenues leading to such information. The result is that the newspaper instinct of the man on the hunt for news is aroused; consequently there is a "story," and naturally a second hand "story."

On the other hand if the paper and its representatives are taken into the confidence of these men, kept informed as to every move, given the proposals and objections and courteously requested to delay the publishing of anything until such time as matters have been brought to a satisfactory conclusion, everything would run along smoothly and no one would be continually in "hot-water" lest something should leak out.

A paper which is kept in touch with these things exhibits more care in the future in editing its columns containing matter which in some way or other may have a bearing on the very points which arose at the meeting behind closed doors. If this were done there would be a tendency to have nothing appear which does not coincide with the facts and which will give no trouble to the particular parties it affects.

OUT-OF-DATE RETAILERS.

An incident has come to our notice showing how a dealer lost a customer for the sake of a cent—not on account of any dispute over the price but because the grocer was in a cranky mood.

This is how it happened. A woman sent her little daughter to the store to purchase a four-cent article giving her a five-cent piece and at the same time telling her that she might have the extra cent.

She gave the merchant the money which he put into the till but he did not hand her back the change. After waiting for a time she asked him for it but the grocer in a gruff tone told her he could not waste time making change for one cent. This sent the little girl home crying. The incident lost a customer.

It is almost beyond belief that such a thing can happen in a store which takes any pride whatever in service; yet it is an actual fact.

We know of another dealer who lost a customer by refusing to change a piece of ham which did not suit the mother when brought home by her daughter, because, as the merchant told her, it was handled in her mother's dirty hands.

These are samples of salesmanship among some of the out-of-date retailers.

THE "BAD EGG" QUESTION.

Is it better to sell fewer eggs at a higher price, or more eggs at a lower price to continually dissatisfied customers? That is the question city merchants and produce men are asking in their endeavor to make it a criminal offence to sell rotten eggs. Knowing the facts the answer is almost self-evident.

There is more profit and general satisfaction to everyone concerned to deal in first class eggs.

Take the farmer. How does he come out? To begin with, he looks after egg collections better, receives a better price for them, and the few rotten ones he loses, if he is careful, are a mere drop in the bucket.

With honest eggs coming in the produce man can get a good price for them, is saved much labor in examination, and sells sound eggs. Similarly is the retailer affected, and even to a greater degree, for a few rotten eggs will often cost him customers. There is no better advertisement than honest eggs.

Does the customer benefit? Suppose he pays 30c for "eggs" and 35c for the perfectly kept article, for that represents about the price difference. Out of a dozen of the former he loses two, which is by no means abnormal. His account stands thus:

10 eggs cost 30c (two bad.)
12 eggs cost 35c (all good.)

Thus he is more than even in actual cash, besides the peace of mind in knowing, when he opens a boiled egg for his breakfast, that it will be perfectly fresh.

More power to the movement now on foot to make the sale of rotten eggs a criminal offence. Nobody will lose, and there is everything to be gained by such action being taken.

WAGE A COLLECTING CAMPAIGN.

Now is the time when merchants should look to their outstanding accounts. The crops have been good, and from all sections of the country come reports of the freeness of money. Farmers are realizing on their grain, live stock, and fruits, and they ought to be in a good financial standing to meet their accounts.

There is no opportunity for anyone to raise the plea of hard times or money scarcity this autumn.

We do not live in an age when people need no reminder that they owe money for goods purchased, so that the merchant should make it a point to send out his accounts promptly, and if there is no immediate desire to settle, get after the delinquents, either by personal call or by letters. We know that the busy merchant has little time to attend to his accounts, and that if his customers only treated him fairly there would be no need to have to add to his work by collecting what is owing to him. But as it is necessary, then the only thing to do is to go after the money systematically.

The merchant should not let the idea that he may offend a customer affect his getting after his accounts promptly. The man who means to pay does not mind a gentle reminder that he is behind time with his money. He realizes that the merchant has to live, and when it is pointed out firmly but courteously that the money is wanted, then there is little fear that umbrage will be taken.

Collecting accounts is one of the most important parts of a credit business, and should receive the close attention of every dealer. The accounts should not be put off for a few spare moments, as is often done. They should receive first attention, for by them alone can he live.

The sending out of invoices, and the close scrutiny of the books, with a consequent close tab on those who are not settling, should be a regular part of the business system of a merchant. There should be no hesitation in getting after a long winded customer. Keep hammering and there are very few who will withstand the process for long.

A SUBTLE FORM OF DISHONESTY.

From time to time there is in evidence a peculiar form of dishonesty which is the more dangerous in that it does not involve an indictable offence. This particular breach of probity consists in accepting a salary for filling one position while surreptitiously using a part of the time which should be devoted to the interests of the one employer to do work for and receive payment from another.

A case in point is brought to mind by the newspaper notices respecting the firm of C. D. Sheldon. This man was accustomed to employ as stool-pigeons, men in responsible positions in various businesses, from government departmental employes in Ottawa, it is said, to men in financial institutions in various financial centres. It is entirely unnecessary to comment upon the ethics of the tempter. The serious question is with respect to the lack of business honor which permits a man to sell his whole time to an employer, accepting a substantial yearly salary for same and then to steal part of this time for the purpose of increasing his income.

Where a man can, without lessening his value to his employer, devote his evenings to extra work, one cannot take exception to this method. The point in question involves a form of dishonesty which is often practised by men whose integrity so far as actual cash or even finer points of honesty are concerned, is unexceptional. Cases of this sort come up more often than is generally realized and it is indeed time that steps were taken to protect an employer against petty and sometimes serious thefts of this sort, as against the more overt forms which involve the actual handling of cash. The government at Ottawa is endeavoring to prevent it, but the law is not yet of sufficient breadth to cover the ground.

A divided attention means lessened power of concentration and the opportunities of taking off a few minutes, or hours, of course increases with the responsibility of an employe's position. Should a man reaize that by thus dividing his time and attention he is seriously lessening his earning power and consequently his value to his employer, selfish reasons alone would doubtless prevent much of such action.

AVOID DEAD STOCKS.

There are many things in the trade that the retailer should avoid. One of them is the carrying of dead stock and particularly when the merchant cannot afford it. It always represents a loss because there's money invested in it.

Many dealers when offered a quantity price on some goods, snatch at it and tie up a lot of money. They never stop to figure out the interest on their money invested which would often more than repay them if they bought as necessity demanded.

There is still another way to look at the question. If a small dealer ties up considerable money in two or three articles he has not the means of getting a good assortment. Lack of assortment is often the cause of diverting trade to the mail order houses and in the end he loses more than he had gained by getting this quantity price.

Dead stocks are not relished by any merchant. The sooner he turns over his stock the better he likes it. Therefore it ought to be the aim of every dealer to see that all goods are disposed of in season. Summer goods should be moved out before too late and the same applies to the other seasons.

Avoid as much as possible the carrying of dead stock.

If you have any trouble in getting enthusiastic get out and rub up against people who are not built on the cold storage plan. Enthusiasm is contagious and you might catch a little of it.

Ideas are what count. If you cannot evolve your own, make haste to adopt some good ones from another source. Ideas you must have.

Don't stop with just being honest enough to refrain from picking a man's pocket. Be so honest that you would not think of keeping quiet about a purse you found on the street.

You can't get along with people unless you have tact. You can't develop your business far unless you can get along with people. With all your getting, get tact.

WHERE CREDIT IS NECESSARY.

The most successful merchants who do a credit business have a distinct understanding with the customer at the beginning of the account. Either the bills are to be paid weekly, monthly or at a certain stipulated time, and if the accounts are not paid when the customer agrees to pay them, the line of credit is cut off.

When to stop extending credit to a customer is one of the most serious problems that the country merchant has to face. It is at once productive of more bad accounts and of the loss of more good accounts than any other item in the list of store management problems that the retailer has to contend with.

Credit is a necessary evil in merchandising. Some one merchant in a town may make a go of cash business, and some merchants cannot do it. There must be some credit business, and the man who gives credit must do so under a well established and thoroughly understood system or he will soon find his bills receivable eating up his profits and wearing a big hole in his reserve capital. Of course there are extraordinary circumstances, such as crop failure, deaths, loss of work and things of that nature, where exceptions are made, but even then, great care should be exercised, in the extension of credit, and notes should be taken, bearing interest, for the merchant is as much entitled to interest on money that he may have tied up in merchandise sold on credit, as is the banker on money that he loans.

The only sure rule is to have a system, make a personal study of each customer and his ability to pay, be strict and prompt about collections, require notes on overdue accounts and close up those that appear hopeless. It is better to lose a customer and a small amount of money than to lose a large amount of money and the customer too.

IMPORTANT LEGAL DECISION.

Although the insurance policy of the Brooks-Sanford Hardware Company, Toronto, in the Rochester-German Fire Insurance Company had a clause in it reading, "If the property assured is assigned without the express permission of the company the policy shall be void, but the condition does not apply to a change of title by succession or by the operation of law or by death," and, although that company did assign without the express permission of the insurance company, Justice Middleton, recently held that the policy was not void. The question arose in the action of Osler Wade, assignee for the Brooks-Sanford Company, to recover $2,402 insurance. The company assigned on October 9, 1908, and the fire broke out on October 20. The Judge held that the assignee is entitled to the money on behalf of the creditors.

Grocers are meeting with opposition from druggists in the sale of spices, which, during the last 600 years have been associated in the public's mind with grocery stores. It is up to the trade to hold its own.

Montreal, Oct. 20.—The sugar situation still continues to occupy the spotlight as far as local affairs are concerned. Whether or not the alleged large German crop will still further weaken the raw market and force another decline in refined is what is puzzling local men. Reports of recent storms in Cuba have changed matters slightly and it is thought this may counteract the German crop effect, at least sufficiently to keep refined prices at their present level.

The Steamer Bellona arrived last Tuesday a.m. with a cargo of dried fruits and nuts from Mediterranean ports. The new prices are on a higher level than the old and bear reports on crops keep coming to the fore.

Coffees in Brazil are worthy of some notice. Apparently there is going to be a crop failure this year, which will put prices at a high level and enable the Brazilian Government to rid itself of more of the surplus it took up three years ago.

Generally trade is good on an advancing market. Sugar is about the only feature showing weakness.

Sugar.—Apparently sugar men are hardly certain what their next move will be. The undoubtedly large German crop has been having a very bearish influence on the raw market, and unless something occurs to alter the situation there seems a certainty of a further decline in the refined article. However, refiners look at the recent storms in Cuba as the means of bolstering up the raw market. Two severe hurricanes are reported in the past few days, as having ravaged the cane fields. How serious the damage has been is not certain, but there must have been a great deal, if the reports received are anywhere near true. If it is as bad as reported there will be sufficient effect to offset a great deal of the German situation.

Local jobbers report heavy sales lately at the recent declines.

Syrups and Molasses.—Dealers and jobbers are preparing for the November business. It is in November that the bulk of the deliveries are made, owing to the cheaper rates for heavy goods at that time.

Sales of molasses are brisk this week as compared with last. They are still short of what might be expected at this time of year.

Syrups on the contrary are having an especially good sale for the season. Country buyers seem to be finding out that it is a cheap and healthy sweetener, and are buying accordingly.

Tea.—The season in Japan is practically over now, and only the fag ends are being cleaned up.

Locally the demand for all grades of Japans and the cheaper grades of Ceylons is the feature. Other lines are in fair demand. Prices are very steady and firm at former quotations.

Coffee.—Although the visible supply of coffee is plenty for the world's requirements, there is, nevertheless, a firm opinion that coffees, Brazilian in particular, are going to be high for at least another year.

In support of this a recent dispatch from Brazil sources via New York has been made public. In part it says: "The coffee trees are sick. Frost did not do much damage, but the drought and steady cold weather stunted the sap life of the trees. They have lost their leaves the same way trees do in the severity of European winters. The twigs appear exceedingly dry and withered, and there are no flowering buds in sight. If this continues it looks like a crop failure, and on top of a small crop this season Brazil is in for two years of high prices."

As to whether this is an exaggeration or not, time will tell. At present the market holds high and firm in all lines.

Spices.—Peppers are holding more firmly than last week, and the reports from New York tend to strengthen the situation. Apparently grinders are replenishing for the winter season. In other lines demand remains good, at prices held fairly firm. Pickling spices are still having a constant and brisk sale, and seem likely to do so, well on into the colder weather.

Dried Fruits.—The steamer Bellona, first fruit boat from the Mediterranean to arrive here this fall, arrived in port last Tuesday morning. She carried a large and well-assorted cargo of nuts and dried fruits. There has been rather more interest taken than in former years, owing to the bare state of both market here.

There has been an advance of 1½c in Valencia raisins this week. This is due to reports regarding the new crop, which is said to be light. As a result there has been a small slackening in demand, dealers evidently thinking that the waiting game is the best. Prices may be lower, but so far there is no good evidence to show it.

Figs also show an advance, and are selling well at the new figures.

Nuts.—The nut scarcity is now somewhat relieved by the arrival of the Bellona, the first Mediterranean boat, which came on Tuesday. Still prices are even a shade firmer than formerly, particularly almonds (shelled) which show a slight advance. It is said that new crop prices will be higher in almost all the European lines, even when the second steamer arrives.

There has been so little stock held here that trade has been very light, and what appeared was snapped up at once. This week has marked an improvement, owing to new arrivals and some of the new quotations.

Evaporated Apples.—There are a few of the early apples left on the market, but they are inactive at present. None of the winter stock to speak of has come on the market as yet, so naturally the market is simply beating time.

It is reported that there will be some supplies of good winter stock coming in shortly, and that the range of prices will be higher.

Beans and Peas.—Farmers are always given to postponing their pea threshing until after everything else is finished up. This has caused a scarcity in the pea market which is being felt considerably. Prices are very firm, though as yet no changes have taken place. It would be no surprise to see a temporary advance shortly until the crop begins to come in more freely.

Beans are enjoying a brisk demand at present prices. Cool weather nearly always has this effect on bean markets. Also the present lower prices of pork have a good deal to do with this activity.

Rice and Tapioca.—An advance has taken place in tapioca. It is now quoted at 6 to 7 cents. This has not been unlooked for, as the market has been firm for some time past and some advances have taken place in the primary market already.

The cause is the same one for the advances some few months ago, the utilization of the plantations for rubber, and thus cutting down the production. It is said that this advance is almost sure to be permanent, or at least until some provision is made to increase the production largely. Rubber brings larger dividends, hence the changes that are being made in such numbers. Rice is in growing demand as the cold weather approaches, and is holding at firm prices.

CANNED GOODS

MONTREAL.—People have evidently decided that the recently advanced prices of canned vegetables and fruits are there to stay, as they are beginning to buy freely. The demand for the latter is exceptionally brisk, owing largely to the scarcity of good evaporated lines this fall.

There has been a 20c advance in Clover Leaf and Horseshoe salmon. This is said to be due to the fact that the pack was short, but whether this is really the case remains to be seen. Packers are stated to be holding most of their output for export, and as a result the home market suffers. A second result is shown in the demand existing for other lines of fish, which are being used to take the place of salmon.

Meats show advance in some lines, and firm prices throughout. The 5-case discount of 2½ per cent. has been taken off.

TORONTO — Deliveries of canned goods particularly tomatoes are occupying considerable of the attention of the wholesale trade just now. And it may be remarked that the canned goods situation presents on the surface a decided firmness. One instance may be taken to show the strong basis upon which business is now being transacted. A wholesaler through a broker sold a car of No 2 tomatoes to another wholesaler at $1.12½, making ten per cent. profit. They were f.o.b. the factory where they were put up. Tomatoes are exceedingly firm and many say they are going to be quoted at a higher price. In fact, one of the trade stated that any sales they were making now of tomatoes was at the $1.25 price.

There is an "insurgent" feeling among the retail trade, although it has not been loudly expressed. A number have asserted that they have received a full complement of peas, but others again say they have received only the percentage which was to have been allotted. This difference in treatment may have been entirely by accident, but some of the retail trade have been inclined to question it. One grocer also stated that he had received twice the amount of salmon he had ordered. Yet wholesalers are willing, they say, in fact are glad to take back any salmon a retailer, for some reason or other, may not want to accept. Some have declined their full orders because the high price allowed them to accept only part of their order. The wholesaler claims that it is valuable holding and the grocer who returns it now will be looking for the same salmon some time in the future, but he will be unable to secure it at the same price. So there are differences of opinion.

ONTARIO MARKETS

POINTERS—

Sugar—Market weaker.

Canned Tomatoes—Quoted at advance.

Dried Fruits—Very firm.

Toronto, Oct. 20.

A feeling of satisfaction with the season's business pervades the wholesale district. Opinions offered by jobbers agree that the orders coming in are exceptionally encouraging both from their number and the amount of goods asked for. Another feature is the fact that collections are good and while the ideal condition of all payments being promptly made could hardly be expected, still there has been a marked improvement in the financial end of the relations between the wholesale and retail trades.

The prospects for a heavy fall trade are bright and it is generally believed that throughout the entire Dominion the amount of business that will be transacted before the new year will be most encouraging.

In canned goods tomatoes are being delivered and any buying that is now being carried on by jobbers is between themselves for the most part. The price, too, has been increased in Montreal by the wholesale trade and in Toronto it is understood that practically the same price prevails and it is admitted that the condition of the market warrants the higher price.

Sugar is if anything a little weaker than when last referred to. Reports of an immense beet sugar crop in Europe has had the tendency of weakening the market and on that account it is felt that the next move will be another drop.

Spices are firm as also are nuts and dried fruits. The general markets have not materially changed since a week ago.

Sugar—Reports of the European beet crop indicate an immense crop, heavier in fact than ever before and it has been stated that even if the Cuban crop were wiped out there would be enough of the beet crop to meet the demand. This report has had the tendency of weakening the tone of the market. Other influences are at work. A fierce windstorm in the tropics has worked havoc with the sugar cane crop according to press reports which, however, have not been substantiated. It will likely be some time before the exact news is received, but the majority of the trade opinions is that the despatches have borne exaggerated reports. Therefore, but little strength has yet come to the market as the result of the storm news. The demand for sugar is also beginning to weaken. The fruit season has about spent itself and already a falling off is noticeable. Thus the principal character of the sugar market is weakness and the next movement in prices should be downward.

Syrup and Molasses—Following the recent reduction in the price of syrups there has been an active demand with every prospect of heavy business during November.

Dried Fruits—The situation in dried fruits has not changed materially since last week. The feeling that there is a general scarcity of dried fruits this year is holding and is pretty well substantiated by recent reports bearing out the statements that were received earlier in the season and upon the strength of which some of the wholesale trade bought at prices which were much lower than those now demanded for the same goods. New figs have arrived, and a shipment of currants and raisins, but receipts of the latter have been coming pretty freely. Prunes hold their firm position which, indeed, is common of all the fruits.

Coffee—The increased price of Rios and Santos has had the effect of strengthening up the other coffees. It is now practically assured that there is a short crop in Brazil and this knowledge was not general until the old stock was pretty well cleaned out. The bareness of the market contributes to the strength of the prices.

Spices—Again is the word "firm" to be applied in referring to this market. Peppers are high in price and are likely to go higher. Increased consumption is responsible for the strength of some prices and short crop conditions is the reason in other lines.

It is difficult to secure apples and those in the evaporating business are not holding forth bright prospects of heavy stocks. The situation will be quite the reverse judging from the present aspect of the apple yield.

Nuts—This market continues with decided firmness. A crop of walnuts in France, larger than was expected, is now in prospect. Prices of nuts are generally high and there is not much likelihood of easier prices for the Christmas and fall trade. The arrival of steamers may relieve the situation, but the price is not likely to be affected for, according to the general reports, the supply of nuts sufficient to meet a heavy demand cannot be secured. Short crops in this market are creating the same stiff prices that are found in some of the other markets.

MANITOBA MARKETS

POINTERS—

Dried Fruits—Strong but unchanged.

Sugar—Declining.

Winnipeg, Oct. 20.—The same condition prevails on the general market that has been evidenced for some time. With the exception of sugar and syrup, the market is fairly strong. The output is large on a wide range of stuff, and merchants are stocking heavily in many lines that cannot be quoted. Wholesalers everywhere are well satisfied with the fall trade, and anticipate an excellent winter's run. They are preparing for an unprecedented holiday trade and it would seem that they will not be disappointed, as already merchants are doing the same.

Business conditions throughout the west were never better than at the present time. The increased population by those who are in good financial condition, and the great number of stores that have been opened up in every corner of the west have created a lively atmosphere throughout the whole of the country. It is a recognized fact that all business fluctuates with the real estate condition everywhere in the country, and as there is great activity in real estate investments at the present time, business in every branch has taken on a brisk tone.

Sugar.—The sugar market has been going down everywhere on the continent, and although refiners in many cases have been trying to create the impression that the sugar market as a whole shows signs of strength, there seems to have been no foundation for such a report. The fact is that in Montreal and New York, where the sugar market is controlled, declines of twenty cents altogether have been reported in the past two or three weeks. A local jobber stated that a future decline would be improbable here, but nothing definite could be ascertained. The following list is the quotation to date.

BRITISH COLUMBIA MARKETS.

Vancouver, Oct. 20.—Potatoes are rapidly becoming a feature in the coast markets, and the outlook now is that high prices will be the rule before the winter is over. Farmers on the lower mainland are selling for $20 a ton at the pit, and when growers on Lulu island, the lowest of land, can get that, it means about $30 for Ashcrofts. Jobbers quote $22 now on lower mainland potatoes. It has been stated that potatoes grown on the highlands of the lower mainland are all sorted out and sold as "Ashcrofts." Ashcrofts have the name, since they are grown in the dry land of the upper country, but there are many potatoes now masquerading under that name. It means enormous profits for the man who handles them that way, for they can be bought, say at from $20 to $25 and sold later on for from $30 to $40, and even now good prices can be obtained. Five hundred tons of potatoes were bought in Langley district, which is withing two hours run of Vancouver on the electric car, including twenty minutes of a transfer, by a jobbing firm in Armstrong. This town is in the Okanagan, which classifies with Ashcroft, as a fine potato growing country.

Bacon is up another notch the best being quoted at 31½ cents. The other products are about the same.

There is little change in the prices of other commodities, butter and eggs being firm, with an advance in sight.

NOVA SCOTIA MARKETS.

Halifax, Oct. 20.—The chief feature of the local grocery markets last week was the drop of ten cents per hundred pounds in the price of sugar.

There has as yet been only a small arrival of dried fruits as the first steamer from Spanish ports is not due here until the first week in November.

Owing to the recent advances in almost all lines of dried fruits, dealers who placed their orders early have good cause to congratulate themselves on saving at least ten per cent. on the present prices. Lard is ⅝ cent per pound higher.

Prices of canned fruits and vegetables have been advanced. The increase is about forty per cent. on tomatoes over last season's quotations, according to the figures sent out by the packers to the dealers. The price ranges from $1.15 to $1.25 according to the brand.

New Canadian onions are now coming on the market in large quantities.

Lemons are scarce and the prices high, being quoted at $7.25 for 300 count. There is a fairly good trade in apples the best stock selling at $4.00 per barrel. The shipments to the British market are light.

There is a firm market for potatoes at $1.50 per barrel. No island vessels with produce have yet arrived, but when they come the price will drop.

NEW BRUNSWICK MARKETS.

St. John, N.B., Oct. 19.—All grades of refined sugar declined ten cents per hundred pounds last week. Present prices are: Standard granulated, $5.00 to $5.10; Austrian gran., $4.90 to $5.00; bright yellow, $4 80 to $4.90; No. 1 yellow, $4.50 to $4.60.

The quotations for tomatoes was received last week from Ontario packers. They show nearly 40 per cent. increase over the prices of last year. This year's rates are $1.15 to $1.25, according to brand. Information now in the hands of the wholesalers is to the effect that to date the pack is only 50 per cent. of the amount required to fill orders. Peas were only 35 per cent. of a crop and pack. Corn is the heaviest of the vegetable packs and reaches only 75 per cent. of the amount ordered. The frost killed off the blueberries, and the pack is away short. All the small fruit pack falls heavily below the mark.

Red Rose Tea

"is good tea"

Appearance is Misleading

No tea expert will put a price on tea by its appearance, as very often the best looking teas are the poorest quality. Every tea that comes to market in Calcutta or Colombo is tested in the cup.

Why should you take any more chance than experts when buying your tea?

When you buy Red Rose Tea in packages or Estabrooks' Blended Teas in bulk you take no chance, for you get teas that have passed the most careful quality tests by our tea experts, giving you absolute uniformity of flavor and strength the year round. Estabrooks' Blends will save you the worry of matching bulk teas.

Travelers Get Letter from Wholesalers' Guild

Asking Them to Remember the Secret Commissions Act—Selling, Buying and Settling Departments of the Trade Unsatisfactory, it says—Advises the Taking of Declarations—Penalties Attached to the Act.

Recently the Dominion Wholesale Grocers' Guild sent a letter to commercial salesmen throughout Canada referring to the Secret Commissions Act. It read:

"You are aware of the unsatisfactory condition of the grocery trade in every department, the Buying department, the Selling and Settling department. To you, representing the Selling department, we would say that you are the custodians of this, perhaps the most important branch of our business. To you is entrusted the reputation of the house—its honour—its integrity—its capabilities—its success. It largely depends upon you what the commercial standing of the House shall be. We select you to represent us for the honesty—the intelligence—the ability which we belive you possess and we ask you to consider seriously the inherent responsibilities which you have assumed as representatives of the House. You must elevate the standard of business morals and the character of your House or you must debase the standard of business morals and the character of your House. Each salesman, therefore, whether he is in the sample room or on the road, carries with him the good name of his House, and it behooves him that it shall be kept by him unsullied.

"The members of the Dominion Wholesale Grocers' Guild feel it to be their duty to make this task as easy as possible for you to perform, and have used their best efforts to make such arrangements and adopt such methods as will enable you to do a clean, straightforward, honest business. To enable you to exercise that sterling business ability characteristic of the genuine salesman without the fear of competition from unfair and dishonorable means, we desire to ask your special attention to the "Contract Selling Plan" in connection with the voluntary "Declaration" supported by the Secret Commission Act now embodied in the Canadian Criminal Code.

The Penalties Attached.

"This section of the Criminal Code provides among other things a penalty "upon conviction on indictment, of two years' imprisonment or a fine not exceeding $2,500, or to both and upon summary conviction, to imprisonment for six months with or without hard labor, or a fine not exceeding $100, or to both who

(b) Corruptly gives or agrees to give or offers any gift or consideration to any agent as an inducement or reward or consideration to such agent for doing or forbearing to do or for having after the passing of this act, done or forborne to do any act relating to his principal's affairs or business or for showing or for forbearing to show favor or disfavor to any person with relation to his principal's affairs or business or

(c) Knowingly gives to an agent, or being an agent knowingly uses with intent to deceive his principal, any receipt, account or other document in respect of which the principal is interested and which contains any statement which is false or erroneous or defective in any material particular and which to his knowledge is intended to mislead the principal."

"You will observe the sub-section "b" provides against a salesman or traveler giving a clerk or agent without the knowledge of the clerk or agent's principal any rebate or consideration and sub-section "c" provides against a salesman or traveler giving a rebate or consideration to any person without the knowledge of his, the salesman or traveler's principal. The seller, therefore, being an agent cannot give a bribe or inducement of any kind to anyone without his principal's knowledge without being criminally liable and even with the consent of his own principal, cannot give a clerk a bribe or inducement without the knowledge of the clerk's principal without being criminally liable. It is equally clear that a principal cannot give a clerk a bribe or consideration either without the knowledge of the clerk's principal without being criminally liable.

Hard to Obtain Evidence.

"This construction of the Act by the Dominion Wholesale Grocers' Guild is upheld by the opinion of E. F. B. Johnston, who enjoys the highest reputation as a criminal lawyer. This view of the Act has never been seriously questioned by the grocery trade. The trouble has been to get evidence of these illegal acts. It is here, therefore, where the usefulness of the Declaration comes in, and which in accordance with the recommendation of the Guild must be taken by the seller when called upon in case of a violation or a supposed violation of the Act. It is, of course, the right of anyone to refuse to give this Declaration, either from a sense of being guilty of the offence or from any other cause; but you must remember that your principal is under contract with the manufacturer that your or himself or both will take the Declaration when called upon, and if you or he refuses, the manufacturer is pledged to the trade not to sell his products to your principal, or impose an agreed penalty for breach of contract. It is therefore imperative, if you remain a grocery salesman, that you should take this Declaration. "There is no shuffling, there the action lies in his true nature; and we ourselves compelled even to the teeth and forehead of our faults, to give in evidence," as Shakespeare puts it.

"It is, therefore, clearly established that our contracts with the manufacturers must be observed if we wish to remain in the grocery business. Both you and ourselves must adhere rigidly to the prices and terms stipulated, and you will also observe that in the form of declaration recommended, you have to swear that you have not sold sugar, tobacco or other proprietary goods at less than the established prices, nor given more discount off for cash on any class of goods than provided for by the established rules of the trade.

"These arrangements we are pledged to adhere to, and all of us, both principals and employes, are in honor bound to faithfully carry out.

Relationship with Retailers.

"Gentlemen:—We want you to be honorable business men. We want to be honorable business men ourselves. We want you to keep the interests of your house in view. We want you to keep the interests of your customers in view. We want your relationship with the retail trade to be dignified and fair. We want you to assure the retail merchant that the wholesale merchant will be ever watchful of his welfare. We want you to discourage the sale of any but goods that will afford the retailer a reasonable profit. We want you to assure him that his competitor cannot buy proprietary articles at less than he can. The retail merchants are honorable business men. We want you with their assistance and with our assistance to place the trade, both wholesale and retail, on a satisfactory basis so that we may all be able to make a reasonable profit and raise the grocery business to a position that will be the emulation of all other branches of trade."

BIG DECREASE IN EXPORTS.

The amount of butter exported from Canada to England this year up to the and of August was 18,385 packages as against 67,891 packages during the same time last year. Exporting cream to the United States explains this condition. the duty being only five cents a gallon. One port in Vermont received 700 gallons daily.

Light catches of sardines are reported from both Norway and France.

Practically all grades of India and Ceylon teas show a higher price than at this time last year.

Increased Supplies Weaken Provision Market

The Demand in Some Lines is Also Easier as the Result of the Passing of Summer—Butter Market is Not Very Firm—Eggs Keep on Soaring—New Laids are Scarce and Growing Dearer—Production of Butter and Cheese is Maintained at High Figure—Poultry Coming in Freely and Will Likely be Offered Liberally for Thanksgiving.

The price of new laid eggs seems to be advancing with a regularity and steadiness that indicate top prices when supplies reach their lowest ebb. At present new laid eggs are coming in, but the supplies are reduced. There are people who demand only new laids. They are willing to pay the price rather than accept storage or pickled eggs at a lower price. There will, therefore, be a demand for the high priced article even when supplies are most scarce.

The butter market shows an inclination to be wobbly. The country conditions have been excellent and the yield of milk has shown practically no diminished returns. In different quarters the stocks of butter now held are reported far in advance of last year's stocks at this time. Butter exports have been fair and altogether the production has been unusually heavy and the season promises to be extended beyond the ordinary. The result has been to weaken the market and at present prices have not been lowered, still they cannot be called firm.

Although the export demand for cheese has shown great improvement of late, there has been no diminution and English buyers have continued their demands and enquiries for more stocks. The results are most satisfactory in view of the fact that earlier in the season the exports of cheese were not appreciable. Farmers are receiving a good price just now and the October make will bring large profits to the farmer.

The provision market is easier. Supplies are more numerous and prices of live and dressed hogs declined and lower prices rule in some places for different lines of provisions.

Dealers state that the supplies of poultry for Thanksgiving will be liberal. Turkeys should be fairly plentiful, but it is believed that chickens and geese will be in greater demand. However, jobbers seem to be convinced that supplies will be more than sufficient.

MONTREAL.

Provisions.—The feature of the week is the expected drop in the price of live and dressed hogs. At this time of year the supplies begin to come in freely, and a lower range is the result.

Country trade is improving, and will continue to do so as colder weather sets in. Generally trade is good, but without any especial features.

Butter.—Grocers seem to be buying on the hand to mouth system as far as butter goes. The reason for this is not far to look for. Butter in the country shows weakness, and the expectation is that prices cannot hold at present levels. Produce men say that this is a mistaken idea, though they admit that there is a weaker tone than last week. Rather larger receipts this week also tend to depress the market.

Receipts for the week are 9,162 packages as against 6,297 same week last year. For the season they are 370,735 packages as against 326,032 same season last year, both showing a decided increase.

Cheese.—Export inquiry is gradually increasing, and now exporters say that trade has reached a point which will enable most of the surplus to be shipped before the close of navigation. The market is fairly firmly held and, as receipts are now falling off, the market seems to be in a pretty strong position. Receipts for the week are 60,918 boxes, as against 60,790 same week last year. For the season they are 1,698,376 boxes, as against 1,640,993 same season last year.

Eggs.—New laids are scarce and have advanced to 38c this week. It is said by those who are in a position to know that this will not be the only advance. 40c is set as a good probable price for the end of the week. Evidently the hens are not laying as well as might be expected at this time of year, for receipts are falling off to quite a marked extent. The demand for the other grades has not been sufficient to warrant any price changes so far, but the market is firm throughout.

Receipts for the week are 2,171 cases as against 2,404 same week last year. For the season they are 171,179 cases, as against 176,154 same season last year.

Poultry.—Except that arrivals are coming in much more freely than last week there is no change in the poultry market. Prices seem to be a little weaker in the country, but locally there is no change.

Fowl of all the lines, seem to have a better trade than might have been expected, but none of the selling is on a sensational scale.

Honey.—White clover honey is said to be hard to obtain, although all other lines seem to be offered in good quantity. In spite of the scarcity there has been no change in price, and what is more there does not seem to be much probability of any such change taking place. Trade has been fairly brisk for this time of year, and it may be that higher prices will rule before next year's crop is harvested.

Provisions.—Lower prices are felt all along the provision market this week. Supplies have been coming forward more freely as is generally experienced at this season. One result has been a decline in the quotations for live and dressed hogs. The demand for cooked meats has been a little easier of late and easier prices are prevailing after holding steadily all summer with but few interruptions.

Butter.—The butter market has not changed in any particular since last week. Prices are steady and the market may be considered a little weak on account of the heavy production of milk being still maintained. The demand for good creamery is steady but nothing beyond the normal.

Eggs.—New laid eggs are a scarce commodity. They have been received in such limited quantities and the demand has remained so firm that increased prices were inevitable. Dealers now quote them at from 32 to 35 cents and the by-word is "going up." Storage eggs have been brought forward and even they are quoted at a high price.

Cheese.—The cheese market is steady. There is a normal demand with prices firm but unchanging. The farmers at country boards are receiving good prices the highest ruling at 11¼ cents. Production is keeping up well and the flow of milk should continue for some weeks yet.

Poultry.—Business is maintained in a healthy condition. Receipts of chickens and hens are especially heavy and are in good demand. The number of geese reaching the market lately has been larger. Turkeys are also beginning to come pretty freely and it is stated on the street that there will be a liberal supply for Thanksgiving. The demand at that time should be considerable although it is believed that chickens and ducks will receive the heaviest call.

Butter.—The creamery supply is not heavy just now and jobbers have been forced to enter into storage stocks which sells for 26 cents per pound. Creamery is 28 cents to the retailer.

Eggs.—The supply is weak and storage eggs are jobbing at 28 cents per pound.

Cheese.—Ontario cheese is being marketed here at a reduced price just now. The trade is heavy and the quality of all stock is reported excellent.

Social Value of the Association is Enlarged Upon

The following is the report of an address on association work delivered by a Bournemouth grocer at the recent big congress in London, Eng. The objects of the organization he said were to promote cordial relations among the grocers; to organize combined action for the furtherance and protection of their mutual interests; to co-operate with other bodies having similar abjects and generally to assist its members in defending their rights as traders. They have therefore set out on a four-fold purpose and he was persuaded the first was rightly placed in the forefront, for the reason that the attainment of the other three objects depended almost entirely upon the successful working of the first.

The almost invariable test put to determining the utility of an association was involved in the question frequently put by individual grocers: "What good do I get from it in return for my money?" It was exceedingly difficult, though very often essential, to convince a man that the cash return was not the truest test to determine the value even of a trade association. Every secretary, as was perfectly natural, tried to show that his association was there to put money in the members' pockets. But he questioned whether this aspect denoted more valuable work than that relating to the tactful settlement of misunderstandings and the creation of cordial relationships between grocers in a given district.

The speaker advocated the judicious use of social functions as a means of altering the disposition of many grocers towards the associations who thought that having willingly paid their annual subscriptions their duties and responsibilities as members were discharged. The cultivation of the social side would result in their desiring to contribute to their association's prosperity, as well as obtain direct financial advantage from it. "My advice," he concluded, "is get all the members together as frequently as possible and advisable. Get everyone speaking to everyone else, and recognize that whether members be big grocers or little grocers, they are all fellow members, being entitled to their opinions, and having equal rights and common duties."

THE JONAS CASE.

A case has just been dismissed from Montreal courts in reference to trade marks. This was the suit brought by Henri Jonas asking that Samuel Laporte be restrained from selling or offering for sale imitations of Jonas' Vanilla, in the form of Jones concentrated extract of vanilla.

As the trademark had not been registered at the time the sale was made on which the action was brought, the case was dismissed without costs.

No Scarcity in World's Supply of Food Stuffs

Estimates From the Big Granaries of the World Show More Wheat and Oats Than Were Expected—Ontario Farmers Are Busy With the Land and Grain Deliveries are Light—No Price Changes—Total Oat Yield Greatly Exceeds That of Last Year in Canada—Dealer Says Wheat Must be Reduced Somewhat Before Canadian Grain Trade Amounts to Much.

Recent weather conditions have been welcomed by the farmer who has taken advantage of it to prepare the land for the next crops. One result has been that he has not had the time to draw grain to the mills and in some instances millers report that they have had hardly sufficient receipts to warrant the continued operation of the mills. This has been the experience particularly of the smaller mills scattered throughout the country. In general the larger firms state that deliveries have been heavy although to a certain extent they have felt the effect of the farmer's land activity at this season. But as above stated this bears more upon the deliveries of Ontario grain.

The bullish reports that have been circulated from time to time since the crop just harvested began to reach maturity are rendered absurd in the face of the last estimates showing not only a heavy yield in North America, but throughout the entire world. The October report of the United States government places the wheat crop of that country at 700,000,000 bushels and from all appearances the quantity of wheat in both Canada and her near neighbor is far greater than was expected but a short time ago. It is not so long ago that the cry was heard from bull quarters that there was going to be a shortage in the world's supplies of wheat and now Russia, America, the Danubian provinces, Argentine and other lesser wheat growing countries are reporting crops which compiled, indicate an over-supply rather than the reverse.

Canadian wheat stocks are still being held awaiting better prices, while European countries are disposing their supplies in immense quantities. It is held by prominent grain men that there will have to be some recession in price before business in Canadian wheat can amount to anything. At present there is a good business in flour.

Statistics of wheat stocks at Fort Williams and Port Arthur show an increase of 729,712 bushels for the week, while the figures for a similar period ending on the 10th of October indicated an increase of over a million and a half bushels. There is little difference between this and last year's totals. Total stocks are now placed at 7,900,687 bushels, as compared with 7,170,974 a year ago. The Canadian visible supply was estimated at the beginning of the week at nine and a half million bushels as compared with nine millions a week ago and slightly over ten million bushels a year ago. The oat supply is estimated at eight million bushels as compared with two million bushels a year ago. The crop killers seem to have overshot the mark this year.

MONTREAL.

Flour.—There is no change in the situation of last week, except the decidedly better state of the export business. Millers pronounce the outlook satisfactory, as compared with last year. It looks as if people were not going to wait till the last minute to get their goods out by boat.

Local trade has been fairly good, though nothing to boast about. There has been talk of weaker markets, but so far they have failed to materialize.

Rolled Oats.—The rolled oat situation is improving somewhat with the approach of colder weather. This is only the normal increase of business at this time of year. Apparently there is little likelihood of any immediate change in the quotations.

Local trade is about the same as last week, rather light, while the improvement is shown in export demand.

Flour.—Reports from the millers are mostly satisfactory. The wheat market has been rather wobbly of late, but on the whole it does not seem to be losing much ground. There were no significant indications of any price changes. Receipts have been fairly large. The price of Ontario export flour is below what millers are willing to accept with the result that the export trade is limited.

Two English grocers were recently prosecuted for selling Gorgonzola cheese with a rind containing a large percentage of barytes and tallow. They vainly pointed out that they did not make the cheese, that the rind is a custom of the trade, and that no one could possibly think of eating it. It was no use; the inevitable fine followed. Conditions seem to be similar the world over.

Who's Your Competitor ?

IS it that you are afraid of every man who sells flour?

Then, Brother Grocer, your fears are groundless.

For very often your most dreaded competitor is selling to a class of trade you don't want at all.

Did you ever consider that he may even be busily engaged in developing customers who some day will demand your better goods and service?

Why, Brother Grocer, he's working for you for nothing!

Then, who is your really dangerous competitor?

Surely only the man who sells better flour.

Lower price, Brother Grocer, never yet excused stingy quality. Mrs. Housewife readily forgets what she has paid out, for that is past. She remembers the present bitterness of failure, and that is the last impression she has of cheap flour. And every disappointment makes her all the more ready to hearken to your selling talk of good quality at a fair price.

You who sell FIVE ROSES need not meet competition—you can rise above it with a quality of flour and service for which you can claim—and receive—just compensation.

And when you have developed a strong nucleus of appreciative, discriminating, loyal customers of the permanent type—then, Brother Grocer, you will no longer spend valuable time and grey matter worrying over what "that rascal Smith" may do.

For FIVE ROSES prevents your falling a prey to those baseless fears of possible loss of trade which inevitably lead to short-sighted policies, profitless prices, and suicidal competition.

But all this is useless, Brother Grocer, unless you ACT.

Liberal Supply of Grapes for Thanksgiving

Dealers State That From Present Prospects There Will be no Scarcity, but That Prices May be a Little Higher—Lemons Have Firmer Tone, and Are Quoted at Higher Prices in Some Places—Decided Decline in Canadian Exports of Apples—Quotations are Bound to be High This Winter, Unless U. S. Supplies Offer Considerable Relief.

The fruit market is inclined to be quiet compared to the activities that were in evidence up to two or three weeks ago. Peaches are practically done and cantaloupes are almost extinct. Grapes are really the last rose of the summer's fruit harvest. There are a few pears still offering, but the trade is not heavy.

Interest is drawn considerably to apples just now. Short crop reports seem to be entirely substantiated. The total Canadian exports this season up to the week ending Oct. 8th were 53,748 bbls., as compared with 153,533 barrels for the corresponding time last year, showing a decrease of almost 100,000 bbls. This in itself is strong evidence of the shortage of the Canadian apple crop. At all the home markets prices are quoted at a high price and some supplies have been imported from the United States. Dealers assert that they expect stiff prices to prevail this winter, and also that liberal supplies will have to be brought in from the United States.

Lemons and oranges are beginning to excite a little interest owing to market conditions. In Winnipeg lemons were quoted at an advance as the result of the scarcity of supplies. It has been pointed out in this column all along that the Sicilian crop is going to be later than usual and is going to come on a bare market. Present holdings of lemons are light. Added to this is the report that vessels are giving Italian ports a wide berth. This was undoubtedly true for a time, but it is believed that the trouble is now almost past. However, nothing very definite in this regard is positively known.

New crop Florida oranges and grapefruit are attracting attention. The oranges have not begun to come in freely yet, but they will soon be arriving regularly.

MONTREAL.

Green Fruits.—U. S. peaches are coming in freely now at $2 per basket. Grapes, such as Concords, Rogers, and Niagaras are in fine demand, though prices have sagged somewhat, owing to the large arrivals lately. The prices range from 20c to 25c per basket.

Apple prices are still somewhat uncertain, but it is thought that next week will see the market reach a fairly defined position.

Trade altogether has been somewhat disappointing, though the export apple business is a little better. Locally, however, trade is slack.

Vegetables.—Cucumbers and tomatoes are becoming scarce, the former particularly. Quotations now range about the dollar mark per basket for the best. Spanish onions are also somewhat at a premium, showing a 50c increase.

Trade is not what it was at this time last year, though dealers say that it is fair considering the weather lately. A few days of good warm weather would improve matters somewhat as far as buying is concerned.

Sweet potatoes are showing up well. Apparently this vegetable is going to add considerably to its popularity this year, unless all signs fail.

A few good hubbard squash are appearing on the market, and some good vegetable marrows. Those that come in find a ready sale.

TORONTO.

Green Fruit.—Local fruit men have been showing Canadian apples packed in boxes a little bigger than the ordinary strawberry crate. St. Lawrence, Duchess, Snows, etc., practically all in splendid condition have proved good sellers. There is now a good demand for apples and some supplies have even been brought from parts of the United States. In regard to the conditions in Canada, a fruit man recently stated that there was a noticeable scarcity, particularly of winter apples and that they would continue scarce and likely rule high. There is a good crop reported across the line and it is generally believed that importations will be large as the home supply is undoubtedly light and even now the price has reached a pretty good figure. The farmer who did not dispose of his stock early in the season is looking forward to high prices and there is every reason to believe that he will get them.

Lemons are a little stronger in feeling, although the price has not been tampered with. Owing to a disease scare an embargo has been placed on the majority of the Italian ports, but it has been reported raised again recently. At any rate vessels have objected calling at these ports and the idea has prevailed that if any obstacle is presented to shipping new lemons the market will be minus supplies. The exact situation is not fully known and developments are being awaited.

Late Valencia oranges are good property just now. New Florida and Jamaica fruit are coming in to a certain extent, but it is rather pale. The Florida shippers will not likely ship heavily until their fruit is more mature as the lesson of care and attention to packing and shipping is acknowledged as a prominent factor. But it is nothing more than the quality idea and nothing will build up a business more quickly than by giving satisfaction to customers no matter whether it is selling crab-apples or grapefruit.

There is a good demand for grapefruit now and it is arriving from Florida.

The cantaloupe is practically off the market and the peach season is also nearly all in. Pears are still coming and grapes are still plentiful. It is expected that the supply for Thanksgiving will be sufficient for the demand, but prices may show a little advance.

Vegetables.—There is a steady trade in vegetables. Onions, potatoes, etc., are receiving more attention. There is a good demand for celery and the market is receiving generous supplies of it. Tomatoes are on the market yet and are moving along at about the same rate. They are nearing the end of their tether however. Cranberries are in good demand and should receive a new impetus with the advent of Thanksgiving.

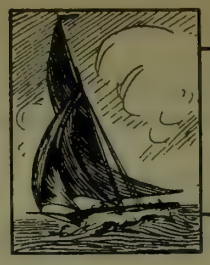
Suggestions for An Appropriate Pickling Window



A pickling window at this season is practical and is easily arranged. One idea is as follows: Take an empty vinegar barrel and put it in the centre of the window and towards the back. On the front of the barrel tack a card of medium size bearing the words: "Pure Malt Vinegar," or whatever variety it may be and also add the price. Then on the floor of the window the different spices and vegetables can be arranged. Tomatoes, cucumbers, gherkins, peppers, cauliflower, beets, etc., may be arranged in small groups and in the very foreground some of the more common spices might be shown in glass receptacles.

A show card could be placed in one corner inscribed after the following manner: "For pickling we have the purest and best." This is the idea in the rough. Pickling is still at its height and it is up to the grocer to get his share of the trade. A window of this kind can be easily dressed and while it may not be very artistic still if it will bring trade little more can be demanded.

TO ENGLAND AND BACK.

U. S. Canned Goods Sold to English Buyers Have Been Re-purchased.

An interesting bit of trade news is reported from the United States. It seems that English buyers snapped up big shipments of canned goods and as the pack across the line is low they were compelled to have recourse to outside countries. It happened, therefore, that they ordered goods from England and the English dealers disposed of their U. S. stocks to practically the same people from whom they had bought them and made a tidy profit into the bargain.

Fish - Oysters

Scarcity of Supplies Hampers Fish Markets

No Relief From Conditions Existing as the Result of Continued Small Catches—Even the Amount of Smoked Fish is Likely to be Small Unless There is Some Relief—One Report Says 400 lbs. of Mackerel are Being Brought to Halifax From England—Oyster Season is Branching Out and Showing Improvement.

Conditions in the fish business are becoming more and more alarming as the reports of scarcity in all lines of fresh sea fish keep coming in. Daily are buyers being disappointed, the same old story, no fish caught, therefor "just a day or two longer till matters get better." The trouble is that they do not seem to be improving at all. Prominent men in the business say that they can only obtain a fraction of the amount needed in the standard lines of fresh sea fish. Unless matters improve in the near future there will be a shortage in the smoked and prepared lines as well. If the weather should clear up now it would take the fishermen all their time to catch up.

Word from the Labrador grounds has it that the situation of the fishermen there this winter is likely to be a serious one. The season's catch is said to be the smallest in their history, and few have been able to lay aside sufficient to carry them through the long cold winter which prevails there.

An item has just come to hand which shows the mackerel scarcity in the Maritimes, 460 barrels are in transport from England via Boston for Halifax. This is certainly "carrying coals to Newcastle" with a vengeance.

QUEBEC.

Montreal, Oct. 20.—The fish market is fairly active at present, and prices are stiffening to a considerable degree. Equinoctial gales are still raging on the coast and the depredations of dogfish in certain localities are the two primary causes, reducing the production of ground fish until the market is almost in a state of famine. In the pickled lines, herrings are still scarce, and salmon not over plentiful, though fortunately the demand is somewhat slow at the moment. Sea trout is in good supply. Green cod is still very uncertain. Fishing is yet very poor, but prospects are more encouraging. Shell oyster trade is comparatively light, due to the fact that the trade last year was disappointed in the quality of some beds, particularly Malpeques and are reluctant to buy unless those offered are of excellent quality.

Growers and Shippers of "Coast Sealed" Oysters

88 COLBORNE STREET, TORONTO

MR. RETAIL GROCER, Everywhere,
Canada.

Oct. 20, 1910

Dear Sir,—

Among other false impressions once current regarding the handling and sale of oysters was the notion that oysters should be watersoaked. But this notion is now obsolete. These are the things you should be careful about in connection with your oyster business: That your oysters come from communities that produce oysters with the best flavor and that mature them sufficiently firm to retain that flavor for the longest time possible. That shipment is made in the most sanitary package obtainable. That the oysters are refrigerated at a low temperature, and also protected from freezing. And that they are displayed attractively.

Remember that the frequency with which your customers use oysters depends entirely upon the satisfaction they obtain.

We would call your attention to the fact that "Coast Sealed" Oysters are grown on the most desirable ground—ground that is famous for the flavor of its oysters; and shipped to you in the "Coast Sealed" Carrier—the acknowledged peer of all packages. If you desire it we can supply you with a Vacuum Insulated Cabinet that will protect your oysters from freezing and save at least 75 per cent. of ice. There are no hampering restrictions connected with any of our propositions.

Soliciting an early inquiry,
We remain,
Yours faithfully,

Connecticut Oyster Co.

NEW BRUNSWICK.

St. John, N.B., Oct. 20.—Conditions affecting the fish market have thus far shown no improvement and the scarcity that has been the rule for the last month continues. Shall shipments arrive each week, but hardly more than enough to supply the local demand. Prices hold about the same. Some good catches of mackerel have been made lately on the Nova Scotia coast, but in most cases they were shipped to the Boston market where better prices can be secured. One shipment of 729 barrels, valued at $12,000, was sent forward last week.

In Moncton last week at a meeting of the board of trade Ex-Governor McClelan, of Riverside, Albert county, gave an address in which he urged that in view of the marked falling off in the shad fisheries, the boards of trade should take the matter up with the government. One man present volunteered the information that the scarcity was caused through the fishermen in St. John harbor catching the fish on their way to the spawning ground. It was decided to ask the co-operation of other boards of trade in trying to better the conditions.

Dry salt cod are higher than for some time past. The quotations now are: large, $4.40; medium, $4.15 to $4.25; small, $3 to $3.25. Pollock are $2.75 to $2.80. Grand Manan herring are selling at $5.25 per barrel and $2.75 per half barrel. Pickled shad are quoted at $8 per half barrel.

NOVA SCOTIA.

Halifax, N.S., Oct. 20.—The receipts of fish, both scale and cured, have been lighter than the average since last report. The run of mackerel along the coast continues, but stormy weather hampers the operations of the fishermen.

During the past ten days nearly one thousand barrels of mackerel have been shipped from Nova Scotia ports to the Boston market. Fish are reported plentiful on the coast, but there is a scarcity of bait and the stormy weather continues to hamper operations. Mackerel are retailing here at 25 cents each. There is no fresh halibut on the market, only frozen fish offering. Heavy shipments of lobsters continue to be made to European ports, over three thousand cases having been exported recently. Last season's pack is now pretty well cleaned up.

Some small shipments of oysters have been received here, but the bulk of the Island stock is going to Toronto and Montreal. There is a better market in those cities and the prices are higher. In consequence they are getting the best stock produced.

The fishing on the Labrador this season being almost a total failure, it will have a tendency to stiffen prices. The aggregate catch totals only 44,000 quintals, as against 161,000 quintals last season.

INFORMATION FOR BUYERS.

Supplied to the Trade by Sellers.

To avoid warehousing charges and at the same time to press the delivery of goods liable to suffer from cold temperature, Laporte, Martin & Co., Montreal, are quoting special prices on wines, mineral waters, tonic wines, etc., for shipment in lots of five cases or more from to-day to the 10th of November. This firm will pay the freight by railway or boat, to all stations or landings in the provinces of Quebec, Ontario and east of Canada.

Bovril was served to contestants in La Patrie's road race in Montreal last Saturday.

Owing to the increasing demand for Purnell & Panter's, Ltd., sauces, pickles, and pure malt vinegar, this firm had to recently enlarge their extensive factory again. They have just received a repeat order for 600 packages of their world-famed specialties.

It's a disappointed and surprised housewife who, upon telephoning her grocer for a good silver cleaner, finds that he does not stock a cleaning preparation of that nature. Window-cleaners, washing powders he has in plenty; but a silver cleaner—well, he says he does not carry silverware. The grocer does not carry window-glass, chinaware, etc., but he has the cleaning preparations. Then why not a silver cleaner. The Household Convenience Co., manufacturers of Wonder-Shine, the new silver cleaner, are offering a very attractive proposition to the trade. Through an extensive advertising campaign, the Canadian housewife is being instructed in the "Wonder-Shine way" of cleaning silver—simply dip in Wonder-Shine, rinse and dry. Each advertisement ends with a direct solicitation to buy from her dealer. Furthermore, a bill-board display is under way to back up the newspaper advertising. These combined should mean nice business for the grocer handling Wonder-Shine, and a liberal profit is guaranteed.

Frauds Alleged Against Two Mail Order Houses

The Principals Arrested—Great Bargains Claimed to be Given as Blinds by One in Order That it Might Reap Rich Profits on Other Goods—Never Sold an Individual Article — Customers Had to Take Assortments—Discouraging to the Mail Order Idea.

Two Chicago mail order houses have been placed under the ban and the heads of these houses have been arrested charged with using the mails to defraud. One of these, the Globe Association, established an extensive business, the list of victims extending from Maine to Texas and from New York to California.

To increase the field of their operations they secured agents in towns and cities who sought orders in their different localities and turned these in to the Chicago office. The inducements as they appeared to these agents seemed very rosy, but it was not until the agents cashed in that they found they had misconstrued the contract and thus according to reports even the agents who were working for this house were buncoed.

Single Articles Not Sold.

Orders were sent out only in assortments. That is, if a customer bought at all, it had to be a list of goods. Many attempts were made to buy separate articles, but this was contrary to one of the company's first principles. In these assortments, according to those who are conversant with the facts, there were some exceptional offerings of which 100 pounds of "fine white granulated sugar valued at $6.50 for $1.75."

Bargains Were Blinds.

These great bargains were nothing more than blinds, the policy of the company being like that of the Italian peddler who explained that what he lost on the peanut he made up on the "banan." It is claimed against the company that the goods were of an inferior quality and that the entire method was a plan to defraud. In some places the agents were driven from the neighborhood by those who had given orders only to be bitterly disappointed.

Knock to Mail Order Idea.

The other mail order house had an entirely different system. It did not fill all the orders it seems, and people began enquiring as to the character of the house. At any rate the head of this concern did not appear in court, having disappeared after being granted bail. Cases of this kind will not cast much credit upon the mail order idea.

WHO ARE RETAILERS?

The retail grocers of the state of Washington have defined "retail grocers" as all those who sell to consumers whether the latter be hotels, individuals, restaurants, railways, steam boats, etc. The wholesaler is recognized in those who sell to the retailer and should receive goods at a lower price. It was resolved that wholesalers who distribute to the consuming public shall be recognized as retailers and charged the retailer's price by manufacturers.

OPPOSES FIXED PRICES.

Duke C. Bowers, a Tennessee opponent of the fixed price selling plan says: "I have always held that when I bought an article of merchandize that I had a right to sell it at whatever price suited me, regardless of what my competitor or the man of whom I buy has to say about it. I believe the fixed price plan will compel every grocer to either join the combines or seek other fields. It will make grocers agents for the manufacturers instead of buyers for their customers."

The production of tea in India last year was 262,560,668 lbs. from 555,000 acres, against 246,906,079 lbs. from 548,000 acres, in the previous year. Since 1885 the area under cultivation has increased by 95 per cent. and the production by 267 per cent.

It Pays to Handle SEALSHIPT OYSTERS

Why Not Sell REAL Fresh Oysters and Get Real Profits From Pleased Customers?

Four points make a success of the Sealshipt Oyster System. FIRST—the fine quality of Sealshipt Oysters and their perfect sea-fresh condition, including the sea tang preserved by our Sealshiptors. SECOND—Publicity, consisting of our extensive magazine advertising, reinforced by the wide discussion of food purity in newspapers. THIRD—Our co-operation with the grocer—the local advertising helps we give him to draw to his store the sales we create by our general advertising. FOURTH—Oysters handled under any but the Sealshipt System of outside icing and air-tight containers are so generally inferior that people leave the stores where they are sold and go to the ones which sell Sealshipt Oysters. If you secure the Sealshipt Agency, you'll get the trade of the merchant who handles the other kind of oysters. If you let a competitor get the Sealshipt Agency, your customers will go to him for their oysters and you'll be lucky if he doesn't sell them all their groceries. Don't delay until the active season before investigating, but write us at once for our general catalogue, terms and full particulars.

What the Trial Balance in Book-keeping is For

In Many Businesses Balances are Taken Off Monthly—Hints for Locating Errors—Importance of the Cash Account—Use of the Check Figure—Different Books Popular for Practical Purposes.

By Howard R. Wellington.

It is a fact that seldom, even with the most expert bookkeeper, will a trial balance result with equal debit and credit on the first trial. An error in addition, an omission, a transposition, or a hundred and one other possible differences will prevent a bookkeeper from "striking" a balance first time.

Date for Trial Balance.

It is possible in some businesses to arrange the office work so that the bookkeeper is free to take off a trial balance on the first, or not later than the second of the month. If such a course is practicable, a rule should be made to have the balance off on that date. In such a case the bookkeeper is in an excellent position to make up estimated statements of the firm's standing in regard to purchases, sales and expenses and comparative statements for the purpose of comparing with last year's records. Then, again, the posting may be resumed immediately, so that any entry for the current month may be readily referred to in the ledger, which is the final resting place for all amounts on the books.

Hints for Locating Errors.

One of the first steps to take is to look through the sheets carefully to ascertain if any balance of account has been omitted or entered on the wrong side of the trial balance.

As a rule, the difference is made up of two or more amounts so that it is not always advisable to check back looking for the exact amount.

Differences such as, $42.00 posted as $24.00, $64.00 posted as $46.00, are amongst the most common errors, and when the difference in the trial balance is $18.00, an error of this nature may be looked for.

An account ruled off, which is not in actual balance is one of the most difficult errors to locate, or to contrast with this, an account not ruled off, and an old balance added in the present month's trial balance.

The Cash Account.

Very few bookkeepers carry "A Cash Account," in the ledger, relying on their memory to enter the cash balance in the trial balance sheet. Frequently the cash balance is omitted, and a great deal of unnecessary work could be avoided by posting debit and credit totals of the cash book in the ledger.

Ascertain that all items have been posted for the month, and besides this, the totals of sales, bills receivable, columnar totals in cash book and all impersonal accounts.

The Cheque Figure.

The use of the check figure with all postings, while not infallible, will prevent most errors if thoroughly carried out. It will also prove an excellent check on all posting, forcing the bookkeeper to use the utmost care in posting.

The trial balance is a proof of the correctness of the work for the period. By grouping and arranging accounts, a comparative statement may be prepared each month without extra work, showing accounts receivable, accounts payable, bills receivable and payable, purchases, sales, etc., so that a close watch may be kept on every detail of the business.

Comparing the three ledgers in use today, the card ledger, loose leaf and bound book, the loose leaf is undoubtedly the most popular.

A large number of firms are still using the bound ledgers, and would not change for any new system, but this style now appears very cumbersome as compared with either of the other two systems. It is impossible to gauge the necessary space for each account, or divide the ledger so that all accounts of a similar nature appear in one section of the book.

When an account is filled, it is necessary to open a new page, probably in some other part of the account.

It is absolutely necessary to have an index, and this takes considerable more time for the posting.

As compared with the former, the loose leaf ledger has a great many advantages, in that any number of filled sheets may be taken out and filed in a transfer, while new sheets are inserted, bearing the same number with which the bookkeeper has become familiar.

The accounts may be re-arranged in any way and grouped for statement purposes.

The Card Ledger.

This form of ledger is not very popular, unless for doctors' or dentists' accounts, etc.

The operation of first selecting the card desired, taking it from the drawer, posting the entry, and replacing in the proper order, takes considerable more time than would a similar process with the loose leaf system.

Then, again, for checking purposes, it would take considerably longer, as the operation of removing the card takes longer.

The card ledger may be suitable for accounts which are not very active, but does not compare at all favorably with the loose leaf.

ALWAYS RIGHT. SUN RIGHT

Stove Polish is just right every time you sell it. and the boxes are always filled full. You have no complaints coming after you pass it over your counter. Why not make friends for yourself as well as for us by selling the stove polish which always pleases the housekeeper? That's SUN PASTE. Just push it and see them come back for more.

MORSE BROS., Props. - Canton, Mass., U.S.A.

You Must Realize!

that an article which has a huge amount of consumer advertising behind it to pull it through the stores, as has

2 in 1

The World's Best Shoe Polish

must be a profitable and quick selling line to handle.

But in addition to this ad-pulling force, "2 in 1" has sterling merit behind it. It preserves the boots and makes them pliable; is waterproof; shines quickly and lasts a long time; does not soil the clothes or clog the brush, and is just now in increasing demand.

You can't afford to be without "2 in 1" on your shelves.

Opening New Accounts

Your business will not grow unless you do add new customers constantly. The old ones will drop out with surprising regularity and those that remain will not increase their purchases materially.

Have a good live talk about your goods in THE GROCER every week. All the best grocers in Canada will read it, and if what you say is worth while, they'll steadily be influenced in your favor.

You will find THE GROCER the most powerful agent at your disposal in the cultivation of new accounts.

Retailer made $600 on one deal because he followed The Canadian Grocer's market quotations closely.

The above refers to a Kingston, Ont., merchant. His profit on this single transaction would pay a subscription to The Grocer for 300 years.

One of the best dealers in Canada, located at Quebec, says: "Your paper is invaluable to all grocers—interesting and full of ideas—a paper that all up-to-date business men will appreciate if they see it once—the only paper that I keep on file for future reference. Many of your articles have contributed to my success, particularly those showing desirability of constant advertising, store system, clean show windows, fair profits and being posted on the markets. I consider myself your pupil, and would as quickly pay $10 as $2 for a year's subscription if it were necessary."

Merchants like these find it hard to understand why any dealer would be without The Grocer every week, even at several times what it costs. As a matter of fact, there are very few of the good dealers not on our subscription list. You will find this true, not of one province or several provinces, but of every province from Halifax to Victoria.

To Maintain and Increase Permanent Trade

We handle only articles of known worth—the tried and tested kind---articles whose intrinsic merit has raised them far above the commonplace. We do this because we like to feel that the folks who buy them are, year after year, adding permanent trade to the business of the grocer who sells the goods. From our own selfish point of view we believe the principle applies with telling force.

We Know of no Safer or Surer Way

There is a good living profit on every article we are privileged to represent---each of its kind is, to our way of thinking, a splendid example of honorable manufacture. And because of that important fact we advertise their strong features fearlessly, over our own name, in The Canadian Grocer and elsewhere, every week of the year.

How to put the Tea Peddler Permanently out of business

IF we were merely going to tell you to spring a well-advertised line of package tea hooked up to a high-quality talk, we would deserve your emphatic "pooh-pooh."

Because, when a woman buys tea from a peddler two or three times in succession it is safe to conclude that she MUST be very well satisfied with the quality.

Our aim here, Mr. Grocer, is to point out where YOU possess a distinct advantage over any PEDDLER and to suggest a means by which you can make the most of it.

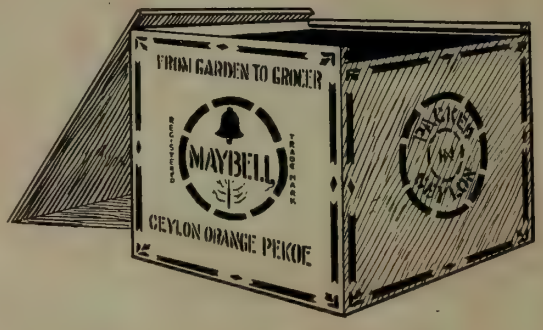
The advantage is this:

When YOU are talking to a customer, she is in your store VOLUNTARILY and is open to suggestion. On the other hand, when she opens the door to a PEDDLER her attitude is usually ANTAGONISTIC.

Now it is obvious that if, when you have a customer voluntarily in your store, you can offer her as good a tea proposition as the peddler can, you can practically bank on getting her order.

That's reasonable, isn't it?

And we think we can put you in the way of offering your customers a MUCH BETTER tea proposition than any peddler in the country. That is:—



"Maybell" Ceylon Tea

in 5 and 10 lb. Lead-lined Decorated Chests.

The prices at which you can get "Maybell" Tea, the splendid quality of it, together with the specially attractive chests, containing just the quantity country housekeepers prefer to buy, make this Maybell Tea Chest Proposition the ONE SURE METHOD of regaining your tea trade from the peddling fraternity.

Following are the prices of Maybell in 5 and 10 lb. boxes respectively:

5 lb. boxes (8 to a case) 22½c. lb.
10 lb. boxes (4 to a case) 22c. lb.
50 lb. half chests - 18½c. lb.

These prices enable you to meet the average peddler in price, if you want to; and they certainly DO yield you a better margin of PROFIT than any line of package tea on the market.

If you are interested in putting tea peddlers out of business in your locality, just give this "Maybell" Tea Proposition a fair trial. You will be amazed at the good results.

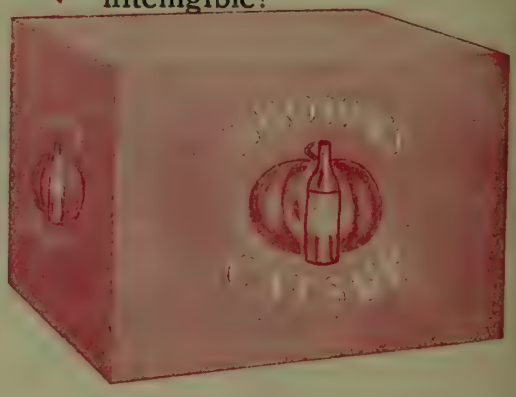
THE GIANT 5-CENT PACKAGE

How Does Your Product Look When It Arrives at Its Destination?

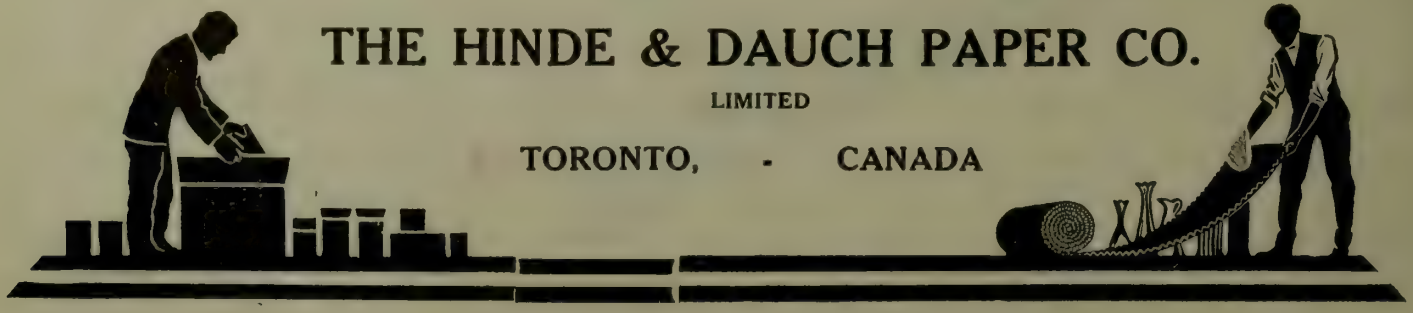


Do you want it to reach your customer or agent in a battered, splintered case, bruised and damaged—do you want your to customer get that kind of first impression? Do you like to be always negotiating over the replacement of damaged goods and return freight charges?

H. & D. Corrugated Fibre Board Boxes

Or do you want you product to arrive in a condition that will draw further trade instead of repulsing it? Clean and fresh—just as attractive as when it was packed? Don't you want your printed label on the package to be fresh and readable and the consignee's name perfectly legible and intelligible?

will protect your shipment against water, damp, damage—and the goods will be removed by your customer in just as good condition as when packed. Wood has become so expensive that it is not economy to use it for packing cases. But even if H. & D. Corrugated Fibre Board Boxes were not cheaper, they would still be vastly superior for any package weighing less than 100 pounds. Although they cost less and are a great deal lighter, they are five times as strong and have greater carrying power. The cellular construction of the board makes the cases so resilient that they will stand most extraordinary rough handling and abuse.



Trim Down Your Freight Bills

Save on each shipment the unnecessary expense occasioned by the greater weight of wood. H & D Corrugated Fibre Board Boxes will help you to make this saving and will put the shipment into your customer's place of business in better condition. Not only do the contents of the case go better in H & D Corrugated Fibre Boxes, but the box itself, with its attractive monogram in colors, retains its freshness and attractive appearance when a wood box would be cracked and battered and not fit to be receipted for at the customer end.

Write us what you ship and ask for our free booklet "How to Pack It." We want to prove to you that you need H & D Corrugated Fibre Board Boxes in your business.

Let Us Design a Sample For Your Product

No matter what you have for shipment, we can design a better, cheaper, more satisfactory packing case than you are now using—a case that will save you 10 p.c. to 87 p.c. in freight charges—25 p.c. to 50 p.c. in packers' time—90 p.c. of your storage space. A saving in freight charges because the H & D Corrugated Fibre Board Cases are so much lighter than wood. A saving in packers' time because an H & D Case can be set up and sealed in one-half the time a wood box can be procured and nailed. A saving in storage space because a thousand H & D Cases can be stored in the space ten of your wood cases now occupy. We will gladly design a specimen case for you to specially fit your needs—that you may examine and test and prove. This will cost you nothing—involve no obligation. It will illustrate not only the economy and efficiency of H & D Cases, but the better advertising value. Write us to-day for full information.

"ALFONSO GAROFALO" BRAND

Absolutely the largest shipment ever brought into Canada

This event emphatically confirms our repeated statements that this is the leading imported Macaroni, and consequently the brand for you to feature.

It MUST meet the demands of the country, else we could not sell 100,000 boxes a year, as we do.

As sole agents for Canada we would ask you to secure prices immediately. This lot will move quickly, much already being sold, and owing to uncertainty of obtaining further supplies without trouble through Port of Naples.

Other Italian Specialties:

Because we thoroughly know conditions in Italy, and have a wide and strong connection there, and through our having made a special study of the wants of the Canadian market, we are qualified to judge what will "go" here, and what will not. As the largest importers and jobbers of Italian groceries, we have no hesitation in urging your critical consideration of these lines. Apply Your Selling Power

If you have not already done so—the first thing you will do after reading this number, with its practical studies in selling power, will be to say to yourself—

"Among the hundreds of articles on my shelves, what select list shall I decide upon for exerting my selling powers?"

This will be the practical way to put to work this great force on the road to prosperity. Make such a list—and on that list place prominently

Pure Gold Goods

(Trade Mark Registered)

Perhaps at the very start you won't want to make your list so large as to include all Pure Gold Goods with the many other good lines that should be represented. Then suppose you select for special effort, Pure Gold Jelly Powders, Quick Puddings—any one feature of the line, whichever you choose, will repay the effort you put into it.

The profit is there for you. The time and labor-saving qualities brought to any woman's attention will bring a sale. The goods themselves will back up in every particular your endorsement.

Suppose You Write Us for a little intimate information and suggestions for making prominent in your "list" Pure Gold Goods.

And Remember

If the goods are not satisfactory, or do not sell satisfactorily, they may be returned at our expense and your money will be refunded.

This is your assurance of safety—it means that an investment in Pure Gold Goods is like money put in bank—subject to your call at any moment.

These goods can be had of all jobbers and can be shipped from Pure Gold stocks at Victoria, Vancouver, Winnipeg, Montreal, Toronto and Calgary.

The increase in our business—the lasting success achieved by our preparations—are due to our constant efforts to satisfy our customers.

Mathieu's Syrup of Tar and Cod Liver Oil

This is a perfect combination for strengthening and building up constitutional weakness. It is particularly effective in preventing, alleviating and curing all chest and throat troubles. It not only cures the cold—but so tonifies the system as to make its return almost impossible.

MATHIEU'S NERVINE POWDERS

This is a magic cure for all headaches, nerve pains, neuralgia, etc. They contain no opium, morphine, chloral or any other dangerous narcotic or poison. Hence their safety for family use. They relieve insomnia, soothe the nerves and give restful sleep. When taken in conjunction with Mathieu's Syrup they are the quickest cure for any feverish cold.

TEA PERFECTION

What we would like you to answer for your own satisfaction, as well as ours, is this: Would BLUE RIBBON TEA ever sell so steadily and largely as it does if it did not possess these two outstanding characteristics?

Most economical to the housewife

Best value for the dealer to recommend

You cannot sell tea to-day unless it possesses these features to some extent, and you cannot sell tea as largely as we sell BLUE RIBBON TEA unless it possesses these outstanding qualities in a very marked degree.

There are other features favoring BLUE RIBBON TEA that we need not dwell upon, but we would gladly tell you about them.

CURRANTS

IN JUSTICE TO YOURSELF—IN JUSTICE TO YOUR CUSTOMERS—YOU SHOULD BUY AND SELL CURRANTS OF GOOD QUALITY—CURRANTS WHICH ARE SOUND AND CLEAN AND SWEET. THE OTHER KIND—THE RED, SOUR, RAIN-DAMAGED KIND, MAY BE A LITTLE LOWER IN PRICE—YOUR PROFIT MAY APPEAR TO BE A LITTLE LARGER — BUT, OH, HOW UNCERTAIN, AND HOW FLEETING. THE SUPREME TEST IS IN THE PUDDING, AND IT IS YOUR CUSTOMER WHO EATS THE PUDDING AND JUDGES YOU BY THE CURRANTS IN IT.

WE DO NOT BOAST OF ANY MONOPOLY IN THE CURRANT BUSINESS. FAR FROM IT. WE DO PRIDE OURSELVES ON PACKING SOUND FRUIT ONLY AND THE BEST THAT MONEY CAN BUY IN THE DIFFERENT DISTRICTS OF GROWTH. WE REFUSE FIRMLY, BUT RESPECTFULLY, TO EXPORT CURRANTS OF INFERIOR QUALITY. FOR THIS REASON THERE ARE SOME FEW IMPORTERS IN CANADA WITH WHOM WE CANNOT DO BUSINESS, AND FOR THE SAME REASON YOUR WHOLESALE GROCER MAY NOT BE ABLE TO SUPPLY YOU WITH "MEYER'S" CURRANTS, AND MAY SPRING ON YOU THE "JUST AS GOOD" ARGUMENT. THERE ARE OTHER WHOLESALE GROCERS (AND THEY ARE THE MAJORITY) WHO, LIKE OURSELVES, FIND A LASTING PROFIT AND AN EVERLASTING SATISFACTION IN DEALING IN GOOD CURRANTS ONLY. YOU WILL FIND THIS A PROFITABLE POLICY, TOO. THERE IS A CERTAINTY IN BUYING OUR BRANDS, THEREFORE, DO MORE THAN ASK FOR MEYER'S CURRANTS, INSIST, AND SEE THAT OUR NAME IS ON THE CASE.

WINDSOR TABLE SALT

Have you ever had a customer ask, by name, for any other brand of table salt but Windsor?

We venture to say you have not.

But every grocer knows scores of women who ask for, and insist on getting, Windsor Table Salt.

Because Windsor Salt is pure salt—all salt—that never cakes or hardens—that shows no trace of grit or bitterness—it has come to be the only salt used in nine out of every ten Canadian homes.

WINDSOR DAIRY SALT

Countless tests have proved it—scores of Fairs have demonstrated it—that to make the best butter Windsor Dairy Salt must be used.

Practically every butter prize awarded at the Fairs this Fall went to those who used Windsor Dairy Salt.

The cheese-makers who understand their business best have settled, almost to a man, on Windsor Cheese Salt.

They say it dissolves slowly, salts the curd evenly, and makes a smooth, rich cheese that will "keep."

Are you catering to this steady and insistent demand for WINDSOR Salt?

The NATIONAL CASH REGISTER has revolutionized the method of doing business in 900,000 Retail Stores.

THE OLD WAY

Poorest method in existence for handling money.

No record of money taken in.

No record of money taken out.

Under the counter and hidden from view, the old-fashioned cash drawer is not even a safe place to put money.

You never know how much money should be in the cash drawer.

Money can be put in and taken out without your knowledge.

A constant temptation.

Even after you count the money in the drawer, you have no way of telling whether it is all you should have.

Affords no means of protecting yourself against claims of making wrong change.

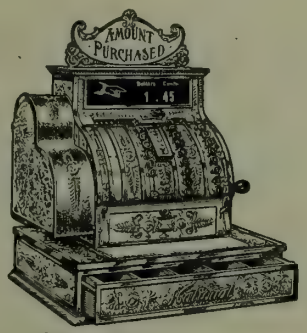
No Protection.

THE "NATIONAL" WAY

Stops losses. Stops mistakes. Increases trade. Increases profits.

Gives a total of each clerk's sales.

Gives total of charge sales, total amount paid out and gives total amount of money received on account.



Tells number of customers waited on by each clerk.

Tells which clerk made mistake.

Tells which clerk makes the most sales.

Prevents unjust suspicion.

Removes temptation.

Thorough Protection.

How is Your Business Handled?

Have you ever had goods go out without being charged? Have you ever sent a customer a bill and then had her come in and claim she had paid it? Have you ever sat up "till all hours" trying to balance your cash, or recall items you forgot to charge? Are you wasting time on details that ought to be spent building up your business? Think it over — seriously — and you'll quickly realize how a National Cash Register stops losses, saves time, prevents costly mistakes and increases sales and profits.

REMEMBER:
The successful merchant gives every customer a printed receipt or puts it in the parcel. That's protection.

And remember: We guarantee to furnish a better cash register for less money than any other concern in the world. Send for booklets.

"Well worth pushing hard."

Most grocers know these brands to be among the most profitable lines in the trade.

Your selling power is greatly enhanced by handling goods of such consistent high quality as the lines of the Dominion Canners, Limited.

By a concentration of effort and standardization of method, this organization is able to produce goods that eliminate all risk of a grocer losing trade through selling goods of inferior quality.

Our range includes something in canned fruits and vegetables and high-grade fruits in bottles to suit practically every class of demand.

It pays to push the brands that people know to be as good as good can possibly be.

A Faultless Product

¶ There is no better factory in the world adapted solely to the production of Macaroni and similar pastes than that of Felix Codou in Marseilles, France. Every modern appliance is there—it is scrupulously clean—the original has been enlarged several times to meet the steadily increasing demand from particular people.

Codou's Macaroni

¶ Vermicelli, Spaghetti, Fancy Letters and Figures, as well as Macaroni, are the specialties produced—each one has a national reputation for high quality.

Taganrog Russian Wheat is used exclusively—the wheat that yields the BEST results—the wheat that is peculiarly adapted to the desired purpose. "Codou's"—that is the name to think of when the best is wanted.

"PRIDE OF CANADA"

Maple Syrup and Maple Sugar

"Absolute Purity"

Another Triumph for "Pride of Canada"

Last Spring and Summer Dominion Government Inspectors collected samples of Maple Syrup from all parts of Canada. These were turned over to the Inland Revenue Department and analyzed.

20 "Pride of Canada" samples were tested. Each one was pronounced genuine; absolutely without adulteration.

(See Bulletin No. 214—August 12)

This is a unique honor; but it is always the official report.

You can always freely recommend, for purity, maple syrup and maple sugar branded

"PRIDE OF CANADA."

Never has a sample of our brand been found adulterated. That is a record few can claim!

But we are convinced that in offering these brands for your consideration, we are placing before you fruit that for quality and uniformity of packing, are absolutely unsurpassed. Put up by the reliable firm

MAHIQUES, DOMENECH & CO. - Denia, Spain.

For several years we have been advising you to specify this brand when ordering Malaga Table Raisins. Because our sales have increased enormously we know that our suggestion has been followed by a greater number of merchants annually. Now, these must be what we have represented them to be, year after year, else this could not be. There must be growing a warranted confidence in the brand. These raisins assuredly meet all requirements—quality, price, and package.

Goodwillie's Fruits in Glass

If freshly-gathered fruit stands for an extended period, or is shipped to a distance, the quality must deteriorate. The packer who wishes to put up fruits so as to retain their full, rich, natural flavor, must operate where the fruits are grown.

It is because Goodwillie's factory is located near Welland, in the heart of the Niagara fruit belt, and the fruits are bottled a few hours after being gathered, that they possess that delicious fresh fruit flavor.

Quality Meats in Glass

As a progressive retailer, you supply your customers with goods not only highest in quality, but packed in the most sanitary and approved fashion as well. POULTON & NOEL'S range of meats in glass has an established reputation for quality, and represents the last word in modern packing. Increase your selling power with "Walker Bin" Fixtures

Your selling power is seriously hampered if you are doing business in a store with "old-fashioned" equipment.

But Walker Bin Fixtures increase your selling power.

They give your store a tone that inspires the confidence of your customers —a clean, bright, roomy look, with the stock displayed in a way that acts like a tonic on prospective buyers.

THEY MAKE PEOPLE FEEL MORE LIKE BUYING AND LIKE BUYING MORE

Walker Bin Fixtures are so convenient—they make everything so handy. And they certainly do save waste—both of time and stock.
Don't get the idea that they are costly. Lots of grocers—we can show you the proof of it—have been astounded that Walker Bin Fixtures, considering their manifest superiority cost so little to install. And remember this: Once installed, Walker Bin Fixtures repay their cost in a very short time by the waste they save and the increased business they create.

As a progressive merchant, we invite you to investigate. Begin by writing for our catalog and see photos of Walker Bin Fixtures in active service. Write to-day.

How can you be a good salesman when your natural optimism is drowned by the worries incidental to book-keeping?

Your selling power can never be completely forceful so long as you keep accounts with books.

And the logical way out of this difficulty is to "cut out" book-keeping worries by keeping accounts in the modern way.

That is, use the only practical, thoroughly tested one writing system of keeping accounts on the

McCaskey Gravity Account Register

But don't allow the bogey of initial cost to blind you to the main considerations—eliminated worry and overwork, absolute accuracy, unoffended customers, permanent economy.

The only books required are ordinary counter check books. With every credit sale you hand the customer a duplicate slip and file the original under the customers' compartment, after adding to it the total shown on the last slip filed. That's all your book-keeping amounts to with a McCaskey System.

It takes care of all your accounts with wholesalers in just as simple a manner. It also gives you the simplest and and most effective check against slow-paying customers and makes mistakes impossible.

You will be amazed at the simplicity and effectiveness of the McCaskey System when you come to use it—and eventually you will use it, if you are in business in real, dead earnest.

Our illustrated catalogue would "let the daylight in" on your account-keeping problems. Better sit down now and write us for a copy.

Supposing we were to say that there are 75,000 Keith Systems in use that probably would not be misstating the facts, but that would not convince you that you should have one.

Supposing we were to say the Keith System has been upon the market for the past 15 years, twice as long as any drop-leaf loose-slip system, and that it has been improved from time to time so as to meet every requirement of the retail merchant, we would be telling the truth, but that wouldn't be giving you any of the advantages of the system.

HERE ARE THE THINGS YOU WANT TO KNOW:

1. Is the Keith System Fire-proof? Yes.
2. Is there any danger of bringing forward a wrong past account or losing slips? No. The original slips remain permanently bound in the book, giving you a consecutively numbered record of the account, and only one account is before you at a time.
3. Can more than one clerk work over the register at the same time? Yes, any number, without the least confusion.
4. Will it place a check on forgotten charges? Yes, the best in the world.

Worry won't avoid the loss. But THERE IS A WAY to eliminate "bad debts" and still accommodate and please your credit customers.

Allison Coupon Books

systematize credit accounts, simplify collections, and eliminate arguments. They cost but little and pay for themselves many times over.

HOW THEY WORK

A man wants credit. You think he is good. Give him a $10 Allison Coupon Book. Have him sign the receipt or note form in the front of the book, which you tear out and keep. Charge him with $10—No trouble. When he buys a dime's worth, tear off a ten-cent coupon, and so on until the book is used up. Then he pays the $10 and gets another book. No pass books, no charging, no lost time, no errors, no disputes. Allison Coupon Books are recognized everywhere as the best.

For sale by the jobbing trade everywhere. Manufactured by Allison Coupon Company. Indianapolis, Ind.

YOU CAN SELL GOODS IN NEWFOUNDLAND!

¶ This territory is large and not always appreciated by exporters in Canada, United States and Europe, simply because they do not realize the opportunity there is for establishing a paying trade. Manufacturers properly represented can do a fine business because the colony imports largely from these countries.

J. MALCOLM & SON

ST. GEORGE, ONT.

"I am not going to buy any more of your tea. I make more profit selling bulk tea," said a grocer two years ago. : : : : :

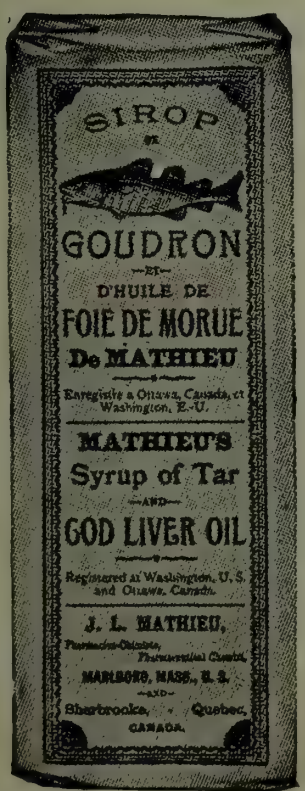
"Hold on a minute," I said, "Let us talk this over a bit. Look up your invoices and see how often and how much bulk tea you have bought during the past year. Then do the same figuring on "SALADA."

Shortly after he called me to the rear of the store. Before him was a list showing the dates and amounts of his purchases and his stock on hand.

"Look here," I said, "You have 656 lbs. of bulk tea in stock now and 94 lbs. of 'SALADA.' You have bought bulk tea twice and 'SALADA' nine times this year. By selling bulk tea you have just seven times too much money tied up. On your bulk tea you have turned your money over twice in the year—with 'SALADA' nine times. It seems to me that by stocking bulk tea you are running a storage warehouse."

"I see the point," he said.

To-day this grocer owns the finest store in his town. When I called on him a few days ago he said, "I wish to thank you for the idea you gave me two years ago. I am not selling a pound of bulk tea now. I find my customers are better satisfied with 'SALADA,' and certainly I am.



"I am careful to sell only goods of undoubted quality—goods that can be turned over quickly and often. My stock is always fresh and clean.

"I put my goods out where people can see them—where they will suggest purchase. I am doing more business on less capital—my net profits are lengthened on the year's turnover."

I looked around his store a minute and then recalled the crowded, dusty, musty, unattractive place of two years before. "You certainly have transferred that idea to your bank balance" I said.

"Yes," he answered, "I realize now that successful merchandizing simply means keeping stocks moving quickly and often—action is the life of business."

REPUTATION BUILDING

The wise buyer looks for his reputation in every purchase he makes. It has cost him time, money and thought to build up his good name—every unsatisfactory article that he sells lessens his reputation.

Some Grocers are substituting other Wafers for Frou-Frou when asked for the original.

The great success of Frou-Frou has been the means of bringing other similar shaped Wafers on to the Canadian market, but—

FROU-FROU

The Dutch Wafer of International Fame

Every tin of Frou-Frou strives to enhance the reputation of the manufacturers, and thousands of dollars have been spent in introducing these delicious Wafers to the public.

Our price-protection plan ensures a profit that enables the dealer to handle Frou-Frou on as advantageous terms as any other biscuit sold.

Always of uniform quality and flavor, they make friends of every customer. Link your own prosperity, Mr. Grocer, to the Frou-Frou reputation by keeping it always to the front.

"Canada's Best" Soap

A line to which he can devote more than passing attention. It is a soap that he can make his leader. Here are five good reasons why—there are others, too. (By the way, you can use these pointers for selling talk to your customers.)

1. Contains no resin, like the average laundry soap. This is because it is a white soap, not yellow.
2. Does the work unaided. No borax or washing powder is required.
3. Absolutely pure. Contains no injurious ingredients.
4. Best value on the market.
5. Can be used effectively for all household cleaning.

When you stock and feature "CANADA'S BEST" soap remember that you are buying a soap that is made by experts, in a modern, splendidly equipped factory. The process of manufacture is entirely our own. And do not forget that we are advertising to the consumer to assist you.

MEDALS FOR SALESMANSHIP.

This number of The Canadian Grocer deals particularly with the selling possibilities of the retail dealer.

The merchant recognizes that his selling power is the principal feature of his business to be nurtured and developed. Without the methods that will dispose of goods beyond the actual everyday requirements of consumers, the buying of these goods at even the very minimum price availeth little. Buying must be secondary to selling.

In this issue, therefore, are many methods which have been successfully used to create new business; there are many experiences illustrating how successful men have foreseen their possibilities in bringing salesmanship in its various forms to bear on the selling of profitable and quality goods.

On page 182 of this issue are to be found the details of a competition on "Constructive Salesmanship" which has been instituted by The Grocer. Our aim in offering medals for the best examples of "Constructive Salesmanship" is to encourage every retailer to realize more thoroughly his own possibilities.

The announcement of this competition on the most prominent feature of a dealer's business deserves careful consideration. It ought to be read by everyone.

ONE SALE LEADS TO ANOTHER.

There are many retailers who expect simply a fair profit on each article sold. Yet there are others who can do more. If one will stop to think, he will find there is a class of article which not only yields a profit on its own sale, but which goes further and helps to sell other goods.

Oysters, for instance, lead to the sale of crackers; a sale of ham means nearly always a sale of mustard, catsup or meat sauce of some kind. Bacon leads up to sale of eggs, fruit to sugar, and so on.

It's the salesman who can diplomatically call attention to these extra articles that is worth his salary, and an occasional raise. The ordinary demands of customers will not, as a general rule, turn over the stock many times in the year. Salesmanship to create the extra demand is necessary.

ART OF CHARACTER STUDYING.

The question of salesmanship should claim the close attention of every ambitious clerk. In this issue there is some particularly interesting stories from real life of how grocers have attained success.

In the case of one special dealer he recognized while still a clerk the value of salesmanship and to enable him to secure it the more quickly he, with a fellow clerk, studied phrenology in order that at a first glance he would be able to know the customers' peculiarities of character.

That this later proved of valuable assistance is vouched for by this grocer himself, now one of the most prominent members of the trade in the Dominion.

The aspiring clerk should remember that the men who are the owners of stores to-day will gradually pass, making way for the younger generation. Other opportunities are being presented by the west. A clerk should therefore not become discouraged. His apprenticeship will prove its worth in after years. It is now his duty to himself to make the best of his position acquiring a good business sense and a thorough knowledge of retailing groceries.

To this end the art of salesmanship should be ever before his eye for it is admittedly one of the most important business assets a grocer or his assistant can possess.

AN APPEAL THAT WON.

The other day a handsomely-dressed woman went into a photo gallery in a certain Canadian city to have her picture taken. The photographer believed she had at least a thousand dollars' worth of clothes on her back. He declared the coat alone would cost her five or six hundred dollars.

This particular artist quoted her $8 per dozen. To this she objected on the grounds that she could obtain pictures elsewhere for $5. The photographer readily agreed that this was true; he could, in fact, direct her to four or five different galleries where she could get that price.

He himself could make pictures for that sum, but he wouldn't allow them to bear his name nor leave his store; his reputation would be impaired. His price was greater because the work was guaranteed.

He said to the beautifully-dressed woman: "When you go into a dry goods store you buy a dress that has some quality to it, some distinctiveness, even if it costs you twice as much. You are now buying photographs of yourself which, you expect, will last longer than a dress; you don't want an inferior article? But if you insist on getting your pictures for $5 I'll be glad to direct you to where ————."

But no more was necessary. The woman thought she would have him look after her wants and he secured her order without further parlance.

That was a good example of salesmanship. The photographer appealed to the customer's finer sense in a manner that caused no offence—he was a student of character.

VALUE OF MODERN FIXTURES.

Many dealers do not fully realize the importance interior arrangement and store fixtures have on their selling power. If they heard, however, the criticisms flung against dirty stores where the plaster is hanging from the walls and ceiling, where dust covers the entire stock, and where the floors are habitually unclean, they would awake to the importance of cleanliness and order in the store.

To obviate one of these unsightly conditions scores have installed sanitary metal ceilings which can be kept in good order at little expense. To improve the service facilities others have neat and attractive display receptacles for spices, biscuits, etc. Modern fixtures for promoting and aiding the dealer's selling power include the computing scale, the cash and credit registers, the silent salesmen, display stands for vegetables and fruit, cheese cutters and meat slicers, self-measuring oil and molasses pumps, coffee grinders, etc.

All these tend to make the dealer a better salesman, because they increase his efficiency in serving his customers. They assist in making sales, with greater ease, gracefulness and rapidity, all of which are valuable in retaining trade.

RAISED STANDARD OF A DELICACY

A retail grocer tells us that he has during the past year induced 90 per cent. of his customers to use a 25 cent delicacy, the purity of which was absolutely guaranteed by the manufacturer, whereas before the same percentage used a 10 cent article of a similar character but of inferior quality.

This was accomplished by advising his customers at every opportunity to use the better article. One by one he got them converted, until the above result was obtained.

The consequence is he is selling an article guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, that is sure not to lose a customer, and that produces a better profit.

That is but one instance of this dealer's salesmanship. He has been in business only about 7 years in a large Canadian city, he has been able to purchase considerable property, which is very expensive in his locality, and with an exclusive grocery store he has now an annual turnover of about $45,000.

He attributes most of his success up to the present time to salesmanship.

STUDY THE STOCK IN STORE.

The dealer equipped with the best selling force is the one who knows his goods.

Almost every dealer who has attained any degree of success, unless he was merely a fortunate "victim of circumstances," will say that it was through gaining the confidence of his customers that he has extended his trade.

To get and hold his customers' confidence he sold quality goods, which returned him fair profit, and he never attempted to misrepresent them. This would have been a suicidal policy.

The point is this: that to talk about your goods in stock intelligently you must study them. Their selling points are what are required at your tongue's end the moment you see your opportunity for a possible sale. While cost and selling price are important features to have in your mind, it is your ability to talk about your goods at the vital moment that counts. When what is important is said it is time to stop; overrun the mark and you lose the sale.

But if you wish to sell delicacies you must know what they are for; and if you wish to raise the standard of a staple, you must know why it is superior to the article you sold before.

INFORMATION IN THE ADS.

A close study of the advertisements in this issue is recommended to every reader. There are fully as many pointers in them on increasing profits and selling more goods as in the reading matter, and therefore it will be to the dealer's own advantage to analyse them carefully.

These advertisements contain selling points which can be used with profit in turning over stock. They contain material which will increase the dealer's selling power, and anything that will bring about such a result is worthy of his time and close attention.

THE SELLING POWER OF THE DEALER

The Grocer wants every dealer in Canada to realize the importance of his selling power. We want every manufacturer to realize the possibilities of the dealer as a salesman.

That in brief is the object of the campaign we are starting with this Fall Number.

The dealer now exercises a large force in the distribution of goods. He can make that force immensely greater.

As the dealer strengthens his ability as a salesman, and as the manufacturer appreciates more thoroughly the tremendous possibilities that lie in the dealer's co-operation, the relations of the two will become more satisfactory.

When we announced that the main feature of the Fall Number would be "The Selling Power of the Dealer," a few manufacturers, for some unaccountable reason, were inclined to think that we were combatting their policy of extensively advertising to the consumer.

We want to say, as emphatically as possible, that consumer advertising—providing it be made part of a well planned general merchandising campaign—has no stronger advocate than The Canadian Grocer.

We believe the retailer has a right to expect that a manufacturer advertise to the consumer. It is quite legitimate to require that he bear a fair share of the work of creating and sustaining demand.

But we do say that the manufacturer is unwise who figures that he has gone far enough when his merchandising campaign takes seriously into account only quality of the goods and advertising to the general public.

When a fair margin is not provided for the dealer, and when his co-operation is not sought on a reasonable basis, the manufacturer can never secure more than a fraction of the possible demand for his goods, no matter what amount of money he may spend to arouse interest among consumers.

Let us illustrate this point.

Say the manufacturer of a table delicacy of splendid quality has advertised it extensively for several years, yet every dealer in Canada sells it to only a small percentage of his customers.

Why is this?

If the manufacturer has provided a fair profit for the dealer, and has honestly tried to secure his co-operation, the latter has failed to take advantage of an opportunity to build up good business for his store.

If, however, the manufacturer has followed the policy of cutting the dealer's profit to an unfair percentage, and foolishly imagines that consumer advertising alone will create the maximum demand for his goods, we say he has only himself to blame for a restricted market.

Let us even go so far as to allow that every one of a certain dealer's customers has seen and read the advertising of this manufacturer. Let us say that it is strong, attractive advertising. Yet the fact remains that dozens and dozens of the people who patronize the store in question do not ask for the goods. They regord the line as unnecessary—as beyond their means—as an extravagance.

In only a small percentage of cases will advertising alone overcome their prejudice. Personal salesmanship is necessary.

And because a large proportion of these people could afford to use this line, and would become good buyers of it were they persuaded to make the first few purchases, it is essential that this personal salesmanship be brought to bear on the situation—the salesmanship of the dealer.

At the vital moment of sale it is the dealer, backed by his personality and his flesh-and-blood power to persuade and suggest, who stands face to face with the customer. And that is the time when selling work counts for most.

That is the time when the dealer can broaden the scope of demand for goods which do not come under the head of necessities, and, as well, raise the standard of the consumer's purchases of tea, coffee, flour and most of the other staple articles.

Some manufacturers tell us bluntly that the dealer will not give them the benefit of his salesmanship under any conditions. To prove that they are wrong we have only to point to a number of splendid businesses—and you all must know some of them if you think a moment—that are being built up largely through reasonable, persistent cultivation of the dealer's co-operation, coupled with consumer advertising.

A few manufacturers have somehow got the idea that in talking to the dealer about the development of his selling power we might encourage a policy of substitution. We need only touch briefly on this point.

The only substitution that can logically be condemned is that by which a dealer induces his customers to accept an inferior article to the one asked for. And a dealer who does that is foolish, for he is bound to lose standing—and trade.

However, as a merchant conducting his own business, and realizing his responsibility to the people who buy from him, the grocer has a perfect right to sell one line in preference to another, providing he has satisfied himself that his recommendation goes behind goods of right quality.

In figuring the margin which he gets on goods sold over his counter the dealer should estimate—and the manufacturer is justified in asking him to estimate—the profit received on the turn-over as well as on the individual sale. Some lines move more readily than others, because of their quality plus liberal advertising, and providing a fair profit is allowed, these are goods it will pay the dealer to push. These are goods on which it will pay him, by his personal salesmanship, to broaden the scope of demand beyond the point which it is possible for consumer advertising to go.

Again we say that The Grocer wants every dealer in Canada to realize the value of his selling power, and we want every manufacturer to realize the possibilities of the dealer as a salesman. Consider the tremendous influence that can be set in motion by a determined and systematic effort on the part of the majority of Canadian dealers to organize and develop to a greater degree the forces that go to make up their ability to sell—to really create demand and broaden the market for worthy goods.

There is no dealer who cannot, by good salesmanship, considerably increase the quantity and variety of the purchases of the greater number of his customers.

Salesmanship Reduced to a Science

A Remarkable Instance Showing How One Dealer Disposed of a Car-Load of Good Sugar at 18 lbs. for the Dollar When He Had Advertised Second Grade at 26—Other Experiences Illustrating the Confidence His Customers Have Learned to Place in Him—The Value He Places on Salesmanship and the Dealer's Power to Suggest.

Can anyone produce a better example of salesmanship than this?

A retail grocer in a western Ontario town while relating some of his methods for raising the standard of the staple goods he sells to his customers tells of an interesting sugar incident.

"Some time ago one of my competitors cut the price of sugar; the regular price was 18 pounds for a dollar, but he started in at 20 for a dollar.

"I began to wonder how he could do this because I knew he couldn't buy sugar any cheaper than I and it therefore looked as if he were losing money.

"A few days later I happened to be up at the station when a shipment of sugar came in for him. Making a few casual inquiries I found he had bought a carload of second grade sugar and 2 barrels of No. 1.

"This, of course, explained the whole situation; he was selling No. 2 grade sugar at the cheap rate.

Sugar Sold Rapidly.

"That very day I ordered a carload of No. 1 and 2 barrels second grade—just the opposite to him you see—and when it arrived I advertised sugar at 22 lbs. for the dollar. Of course this meant the cheaper grade; No. 1 still sold at 18 lbs.

"He went up to 23, I went to 24, he to 25 and again I went him one better, to 26. Inside of a week I learned that he had sold out his entire carload of second grade sugar, and of course at a loss.

"During the same time I had sold practically the entire carload of good sugar at 18 pounds for a dollar and had some of my second grade left.

"How did I do it? Simply by persuading my customers to buy the better quality even if they had to pay more for it. I explained to them the inferiority of the other kind.

"As soon as my competitor discovered my method he went back to No. 1 sugar at 18 pounds; so you see a dealer can if he has salesmanship qualities about him quite easily raise the quality of the goods he sells and at the same time be more sure of satisfied customers."

This dealer claims that salesmanship is everything to success.

"If a merchant can get the confidence of the public he can sell them what he wishes, only, of course, he must be diplomatic and he must be careful not to palm off something which he cannot safely and conscientiously guarantee."

Against the Customer's Wishes.

Here is an instance told by himself of how he sold a brand of tea instead of the one called for.

"Travelers for a certain tea house had been calling on me for years trying to sell me tea. I had always refused. Finally I was told the company was going to sample the town and that I would have to stock it.

"I claimed I wouldn't because I had more faith in the brand I was then selling.

"They sampled the town all night and there was one family in particular which liked their tea. A couple of weeks later the housewife, among her other purchases, asked for this tea.

"I told her I did not carry it and advised her to try something else.

"'No,' she said, 'my husband won't drink anything now but that particular tea, so there's no use of my taking the other home.'

"I told her that I could safely guarantee the brand I was offering and asked her to try it. I suggested that without mentioning the fact to her husband, she serve him three or four days with the tea and them ask him what he thought of it. After assuring her positively that she could make no mistake in quality and pointing out that it was better value, she accepted the proposition.

"Some days later she was in the store again and I questioned her about her experience.

"'When I asked my husband how he liked that tea he said that those ——— folks were doing better than ever, and when I explained to him what tea it was and that it was cheaper he decided to have me buy it always,' she replied. That woman became a continual user of that tea. She has bought it ever since so you can again readily understand what a dealer can do with customers who have confidence in him."

Scientific Study of Heads.

That salesmanship is a gift that can be developed, is another idea of this dealer. It is almost 30 years since he decided to become a merchant. When he began his business career he soon discovered the value of personality. With another young clerk he commenced studying phrenology from a book, but the words were too big and this method was abandoned for one of personal observation and character studying.

To such a science was this reduced that the youths almost invariably knew when to shake hands with customers, when to say, "How do you do," etc., as they approached the counter. They had secured such an insight into human nature that they became valuable men.

Bought in Spite of Herself.

To substantiate this the story is told of one occasion when he was selling drygoods. A woman called at the store to do some purchasing. She brought another with her, asking her to sit down until she had concluded her shopping. Her seat happened to be near the drygoods counter and having no one else to wait upon at the time, the merchant showed her some drygoods a little above the ordinary in quality and fashion which he knew would interest her.

"That is very, very nice," she replied, "but I do not wish to purchase anything to-day you know, I just came in with Mrs.———."

"Oh, no," he assured her, "I know you don't and I don't want to sell you anything; but as you were sitting there I thought perhaps you would like to see the goods."

After pointing out the quality and the outstanding features of the goods, he showed her something else. A somewhat similar conversation ensued and it was repeated two or three times, each time the woman becoming more and more interested, because a better and more attractive class of goods was shown each time. The outcome was that before her friend had returned the woman had invested a considerable sum in dressgoods.

Was She Mesmerized?

"That young fellow must have mesmerized me," she said when the street was reached, "when I went in there I hadn't the slightest intention of buying."

The fact was his manner, his intimate knowledge of the quality of the goods and his unassuming address, and his ability to read her fancies, made her spend her money. That was salesmanship. Another visitor he would have left entirely alone.

Protected His Customers.

A jelly powder manufacturer had been selling this dealer everything he purchased in that line. On one occasion he noticed that the quality was not so good as he considered it ought to be. He was independent and wanted to give his customers a guaranteed article so he shipped back the stock. The manufacturers were not anxious to lose his custom so they devised various methods to put him on their list again, but without avail. He was buying another jelly powder.

The manufacturers then determined to force him to handle their product. They demonstrated in an opposition store for a considerable time and advertised in the local press. They came to him again pointing out what they had done and advised him to "stock up for a sure demand."

"I was asked for that special brand of jelly powder just twice," he affirms, "and I had no difficulty in selling the other."

Later the manufacturers improved, to his satisfaction, the quality of their product and he is now one of its strong friends.

Not only has he been independent in stocking goods, but by consistent quality and by his innate ability to suggest and persuade he has created a large demand for goods that are not staples and he has raised the quality of practically every household article—he is now one of Canada's foremost retail grocery dealers and a prominent citizen of his town.

To Fail in Three Months.

Yet when this man began business about a quarter of a century ago he was given three months to fail.

When he moved off the main street some years ago to larger quarters, according to many views, he had a "white elephant" on his hands. His present establishment—and it is a bright, sanitary and commodious store—has again grown too small.

He had such confidence in himself and his salesmanship abilities that he knew he couldn't fail. He has some 25 employes and they are continually learning salesmanship through hearing him make sales. At least they have the opportunity.

"If I had depended on the actual demands of my customers," he recently remarked, "I would not have been where I am to-day; its the goods I sold over what were asked for that has built up my business."

He prides himself upon not being a price-cutter and the fact that he never handles anything "free."

A Strong Advocate of Early Closing

This Dealer Would Not go Back to Old System Under any Consideration—Has More Time With His Family and Enjoys the Grocery Business, Which Formerly was Drudgery — Takes off Another Hour During Winter Months—The Circular he Sent Out.

By A. A. Martin.

I have always read with great interest the articles in The Canadian Grocer on the subject of early closing—a feature in which I am now a strong advocate.

There was a time when I kept open until 10 o'clock every night, and even until 12 o'clock on Saturday night.

Just about a year ago, in fact, on Nov. 1, 1909, I decided to close my store at 7.30. Now you could not get me to keep open under any consideration. My trade has increased and I get more time at home with my family.

Late Closing a Drudgery.

I am more contented and I like the grocery business, which before was a mere drudgery. In fact, I often wonder how I stood the strain.

Lippincott Street, City.

Dear Madam—

We take this opportunity of expressing our thanks to you for your thoughtfulness during the past in helping us in our business. We appreciate what you have done very much.

And now, we are going to ask your assistance in another step which we are contemplating.

Beginning November 1st, 1910, we are going to close our store at 6.30 every week night—except Friday and Saturday—until May 1st, 1911.

As you are aware, our hours are rather long—from 7.30 a.m. to 7.30 p.m.—and as we have no Wednesday afternoons now, we feel that we are justified in taking this step, and we are going to ask you if you will assist us by doing your shopping as early as possible, so as to enable us to close at 6.30, and we will endeavor to serve you to the best of our ability.

Yours respectfully,

A. A. MARTIN.

And yet I am not satisfied; on Nov. 1, this year, I begin closing at 6.30 for the winter months, as will be seen by the accompanying circular letter I have just had printed. I sent this out about two weeks ago to all my customers. One of my competitors is doing the same thing.

Yet there are quite a number of stores in our locality which still remain open until all hours of the night; in fact, there is one which never thinks of closing, until, I am satisfied, the light bill amounts to a great deal more than the profit on the goods sold.

Would Like Compulsory Closing.

It seems to me it would be a splendid act if the city passed a by-law to compel stores to close every week night at 6.30, and 10 o'clock on Saturdays..

I am now thoroughly convinced that retail dealers should be friendly towards one another, for I maintain, in fact, I know, that money can be saved by working together as friends, buying together and getting the discounts on goods which allow special quantity prices.

Editorial Note.—A study of Mr. Martin's circular is worth while. He has used good judgment in his choice of words, and phrases, and he begins and ends it in smooth style which will cause no offence. Mr. Martin is, too, an appreciative reader of The Grocer. He writes: "I scarcely ever read your very valuable paper without finding something that is useful, and that leads to money. I have made many improvements in my store from suggestions found in your paper, and I have several times made money—or saved it, which is the same thing, in the end—through following your market reports. I assure you that so long as I am in the business I shall not fail to not only subscribe to, but to read, The Canadian Grocer with profit and pleasure."

Conference with Clerks on Selling Goods

By This Method Quebec Grocer Teaches Them to be Better Salesmen—They Get Pointers on New Goods, Which Increases Their Selling Power—Five or Six Profitable Articles Talked up Each Day—Customers Taught to Use a Higher Grade of Tea—Other Practical Methods.

"I do not think that there can be any doubting the fact that it is a man's individuality that makes him or breaks him in the grocery business, as in any other field of endeavor."

This was one of the trite observations made by J. Savard, Quebec, who conducts a paying business on St. John St.

Mr. Savard is fortunate in possessing a trade that stands by him from January to December, and he is never at a loss for something to do. Be it said to his credit that his connection is not a will-o'-wisp one, but a substantial "stand pat" sort, which has been built up by painstaking effort and care.

To-day a majority of his customers order by telephone, and he does not come into such close personal contact with them as he did a few years ago, but even now he makes it possible to meet all his customers once in a while.

Modern merchandising has been given a great deal of attention by Mr. Savard, and he is practising ideas which prove their value in winning and holding trade, and promoting sales that otherwise would not take place.

Practised His Ideals.

Speaking of personal salesmanship, Mr. Savard admitted having given a great many hours' study to it at various times, and said that he owed much of the success he has attained to a practical application of ideals.

"I have educated my clerks along similar lines," said he, "with noticeably excellent results. Take, for example, the scope there is for a good man in cleaning out stickers. If he is a salesman he need have no stickers in that department for which he is responsible.

Daily Talks on Selling.

"For some years I have made it a practice to have a daily talk with my clerks. We have little discussions at these informal gatherings, and I encourage the staff to place before me their difficulties in selling one line or another. We talk over daily problems.

"I study each clerk; endeavor to pick out his strong points, which I praise, and encourage him to spot his weaknesses behind the counter, which I assist him to overcome. I believe the average merchant, from his large fund of experience, could greatly benefit his assistants by keeping closely in touch with them along similar lines.

"Results of these daily consultations have been numerous. We rarely have stickers on our shelves. And here is something to note particularly, we have been successful in introducing and selling in quantities a number of high-class specialties bearing large profits, which we could never have sold in the ordinary way. Each day we take up five or six profitable lines, including, frequently, a new and expensive article. We go into the merits of the goods, talk over their good and bad features, and plan, in a general way, how to most effectively push them.

"Then we all go at the day's work with vim and energy. We have a definite programme, some hard work ahead of us, but success looming ahead as a reward for conscientious effort.

"It would really surprise you were I to tell you the annual sales of some lines which are not even stocked by many grocers. I attribute this business entirely to salesmanship of the highest order.

"None of our staff will ever talk a new line at an inopportune moment," said he, in response to an enquiry as to methods. "When a customer comes in and appears to be anxious to get through we facilitate her shopping. But when a woman enters and seems to be in no especial hurry we make it a point to bring before her notice some article she should be buying, and is not. Very tactfully we offer a suggestion. We never appear eager to make the sale—we are simply interested in serving her more than usually well, you see. That's the impression we create. If we do not make a sale the first time we keep persistently at it, and generally sell what we undertake to market. But we have to be very tactful.

"Many of our present good selling specialties have been successful because of our knowledge of the wants of our trade, and the efforts we have put forth to meet them. Now, for example, we have one line, a high-class imported specialty, rather expensive, which serves as an entree for dinner. We saw that we could sell this line for such a purpose, and featured it.

Raising Standard of Goods.

"Good salesmen can raise the standard of goods sold, even in staples. I do not know how many customers we have switched from a 30c tea to a 40c, or even a more expensive grade. Salesmanship entirely; a thorough knowledge of the goods, not only as they interest the grocer, but as they are interesting to the consumer. I mean by this that a clerk who knows something about making tea is a better salesman than the one who knows only the sizes of the packages and their prices.

"Manufacturers give us more or less assistance in marketing new goods. They could do more for us. They could give us greater co-operation, take us into their confidence a little more. They should tell us about their new lines, that we may know of them when enquiries for the new brands are made of us by consumers.

"I rarely order a new line until it has been called for by at least three customers in fairly quick succession, but I find myself often stocking new brands on first call when I have been made acquainted with them by the manufacture while they have been educating the consumers.

Reads Trade Papers.

"Like most good grocers, I read good trade papers. When I see a new line advertised I make a mental note of it, if I do not happen to need it. The result: when a customer asks for the goods my mind harks back to that advertisement I saw. I feel I know something more about the article. I can talk intelligently. And when I receive an inquiry I do not wait until I have been asked several times for the line. I know other people will be in for it, because in the trade paper advertisement the manufacturer has shown that he has 'gone after' the consumer, and that the retailer can expect inquiries.

"Closer relations between manufacturer and retailer are very desirable," maintains Mr. Savard.

DOUBLED THEIR SALES.

London Grocer Assigns a Special to Clerk's Care, With Good Success.

By C. W. Summers.

I find that the best way to sell an article is to ask each clerk to push the sale of that article to likely purchasers, but not to push the sales of more than one particular line at one time.

I recall to mind one which I purchased about three years ago which allowed a good profit. The article was entirely new and had to be introduced to customers, but by recommending it to likely purchasers we soon had the whole stock sold, as well as creating a demand for it for the following season, when we doubled its sales. And it has steadily increased since.

I could go on and enumerate numbers of such cases. My plan is to ask the clerks to recommend an article, but I do not give them more than one special at a time.

The present store of Jacob Janzen, Rosthern, Sask. Somewhat suggestive of his success since he started business twelve years ago in a building which was little more than a shack. Mr. Janzen has a second store in Waldheim.

Adopts the Latest Business Methods

Saskatchewan Merchant Attributes His Success to This as Well as to Hard Work and Economic Dealings—A Rapid Growth in a Dozen Years—Has Stores in Rosthern and Waldheim—Sells Profitable Goods and Adds His Salesmanship to Them.

Jacob Janzen is a general merchant in Rosthern, Sask. He began 12 years ago in a small store and to-day he has an extensive business, the importance of which may be easily judged from the large accompanying illustration.

In 1898 his establishment was 18x24 feet; to-day it is 50x80 feet, or ten times as large, and he owns 2,240 acres of Saskatchewan land as well.

He attributes his success to the study and adoption of the latest business methods shown by trade papers, to careful store management, economic habits, hard work, and to the general favorable conditions of the country.

Mr. Janzen has always aimed to educate his customers to have confidence in him and in the merits of his suggestions. In this way he has sold goods which returned him a fair profit, and at the same time he handled manufacturers' products, which he could rely upon and conscientiously recommend to his customers.

His present business is an example of the comparatively quick response to well-directed efforts in the west. There are many merchants in every section of the Dominion who through lack of business ability and personal salesmanship have met with failure and yet who were hard workers. Jacob Janzen was different; he possessed the faculty of using good judgment in his trade dealings, whether buying, selling or booming his business.

Began With Small Capital.

This man began his career as a merchant with little money, but with a strong desire to study the details of merchandising and to master them.

This was Jacob Janzen's third store.

His small store soon became too cramped for his business, and evolved into the present building. This is fitted up throughout with the latest and most improved fixtures to facilitate the handling of his customers and to give them the best of service. He believes that this equipment increases his selling power, since it provides for good service which is recognized by many to be half the battle. For instance, he has modern cash carriers, with a cashier employed to handle only the cash.

Mr. Janzen has another store at Waldheim, where he employs three clerks, and in addition to this, as stated above, he owns more than two thousand acres of land. He is a strong advocate of the value of study to improve the mind and methods, and he urges his clerks to take every advantage of new ideas, because he knows that if they become better salesmen his business will advance accordingly.

Act as Advisers on Customers' Purchases

One of London's Retail Grocers Gives Experiences to Confirm This—Says That the Merchant Who Can be Relied Upon by Patrons of the Store Can Sell Practically What he Wishes—Tells a Story of a Young Deliveryman Who Evolved Into a Real Grocery Salesman—Methods for Obtaining New Customers.

"One time I had a clerk employed who was, I believe, the best young salesman I ever saw," remarked E. J. Ryan, a London, Ont., grocer recently.

"He worked for one of my competitors as deliveryman and was general-purpose boy as well around the store. I used to meet him occasionally over on the market and saw that he always took a deep interest in his work.

"So I made up my mind that if ever I got an opportunity I would employ him, providing he cared to work for me.

"Not long after I heard that his employer was going out of business, so one day on the market I asked him how he would like to come over and work for me.

" 'All right, Mr. Ryan, I'll work for you,' he replied, and I engaged him right there.

"He had been doing, as I said, all jobs around the other store, was regular deliveryman, stock mover and occasionally worked behind the counter.

Made Friends With Everybody.

"I set him at clerking and in a week that young fellow was the second best clerk I had; he simply made friends with everybody. His manner was almost perfect and he certainly was a born salesman.

"Why, one day a woman on whom he had been waiting said to me, 'Where have I met that young man before; I known his face, and it seems to me I've met him but somehow or other I can't place him?'

"I told her I didn't think she had ever seen him before, that it was just his manner. But that was the impression he made on everybody; it seemed as if you had known him all your life after you had been talking to him for a few minutes.

"He was always suggesting something to a customer and he did it so diplomatically that he never caused any offence. He used to sell a lot of goods which would not have gone out but for his salesmanship.

"Where is he now? Why I don't exactly know; his father took him off to Michigan and I think he has not made the best of his ability. He would have made, I always maintained, a superior salesman."

Mr. Ryan is a strong believer in salesmanship as a power to be used in moving out goods. This little story he tells proves that he recognizes a selling power even when it is not behind the counter. His opinion is that the clerk who makes the worth-while salesman can only develop by close observation and study.

A Point in Salesmanship.

"One of our local travelers who has read considerable on the subject told me of a mistake that a clerk often makes and I think he is right. The clerk in his zeal to get a further order after he has filled the actual demands of the customer will say: 'You don't want any fruit, etc., to-day?' Nine times out of ten she will say 'no,' because that is the natural answer to the question asked. If he had said: 'Wouldn't you like to get some nice fruit to-day?' the probability is that she would buy.

"So you see," added Mr. Ryan, "a merchant or clerk often defeats his own aim by the words he uses in asking the question, and sometimes too by his manner."

Mr. Ryan maintains that the selling power of the retail dealers would be increased wonderfully if the clerks employed could be taught to be better salesmen. One method would be to invite the clerks to the meetings of the Retail Grocers' Associations and have them listen to addresses on salesmanship from the best qualified men procurable. If clerks were to make a study of this most important problem dealers say they would be worth more money to them. There is no doubt that clerks who do use their selling power to dispose of extra goods are usually recognized by their employers, but when a clerk sells a basket of peaches for 40 cents, when the price is 50, he cannot expect very rapid advancement.

Mr. Ryan tells a story to illustrate this point—an actual occurrence.

One time a certain store proprietor bought favorably a block of peaches on which he stood to make a little money at the prevailing price of 50 cents. He told the clerk the price, but the latter had forgotten it when a customer called to make a purchase. The dealer was absent, so the clerk looked up the invoice and found that the cost was 30 cents and he sold the peaches at 40.

One of Mr. Ryan's principal methods for creating demand for goods not requested and for getting new customers is personal salesmanship, face to face with the customer or prospective customer at the counter.

"When I buy eggs from a woman at the market I give her an order on the office at a certain price. The eggs are counted out when she takes them to the store and she is paid accordingly. If nothing is said she accepts the money and leaves.

"But if I'm here and pay her I ask her if she wouldn't like to try this or or that, quoting a price on an article which I think will appeal to a farmer's wife. She may at first say 'no', but I explain the quality and other features of the article and recommend it. The chances are she buys and probably before she departs she has spent half of her egg money with me. If I didn't suggest I would lose that much trade as well as the profits connected with it. It often happens that some of the goods she buys appeal so much to her that she comes back again and eventually becomes a regular customer.

"Of course, I sell goods which net me a fair return, for I do not believe that the dealer should be made a tool of by any manufacturer who neglects to consider our interests in the matter of profits."

Buy Whatever Dealer Advises.

That customers soon learn to have confidence in the grocer who uses them right, is illustrated every day in Mr. Ryan's store.

"You see those lines of sardines?" he asked, pointing to various brands on the shelves.

"Well I can eliminate any one or all but one of them from my shelves any time I wish," he said.

"Ninety per cent. at least of my customers buy the goods I recommend no matter what they have in their minds when they come into the store. In many cases I have changed the brand of an article in order to stock something which I considered to be of superior quality, and which returned a better profit.

"Many customers use us dealers as a sort of advisory board. For instance we have them ask us every day: 'Which soap would you recommend, Jones' or Brown's'; 'Do you think that baking powder is the best on the market?' or, 'What about that flour, is it better than Smith's?' etc.

"In this way we are often given opportunities to raise the standard of goods we sell and get a better price for them."

This London grocer is typical of many others in the forest city. They have a strong association there and they talk over business matters and methods which are useful to them in adding to their individual selling power. It has taught them to create demand and sell worthy goods.

Goods Are Sold From Sample Only

New Idea Being Tested by H. J. Munro—All Goods Kept in Bulk in Large Warehouse and Sold From Sample—No Goods Taken Away by Purchaser—Small Mail Order Trade Worked up With Places Where There are no Stores—Catalogue Issued Every Month—Cash Business Only.

New ideas are continually being evolved in the retail trade which tend toward the advancement of the system of merchandising.

It has been often repeated that the world is ever in search of a man with ideas. Ideas, when worked out into actuality, often bring stupendous results. In fact, all our present-day schemes and systems of management, and operation, were, in the first place, ideas, with energy enough behind them to put them into practice.

We often hear of new systems and methods being adopted and the credit may not always be properly placed.

The individual who conceived the system—the one that made the practice possible—may be quite unknown. but the business which follows the system depends. in reality, upon the man with the idea.

Idea Put Into Practice.

A new system of retailing has been instituted in Winnipeg by H. J. Munro. For some years Mr. Munro was in the grocery business of Munro & Campbell, but, conceiving the idea of a new method, he left the firm to open a business for himself. His intention was simply to conduct a retail grocery business, but at present he is conducting a small mail order trade, with customers in such outlying points where there are no retail stores. As the country develops and the home business increases, the mail order trade will naturally diminish.

Goods are Sold From Sample.

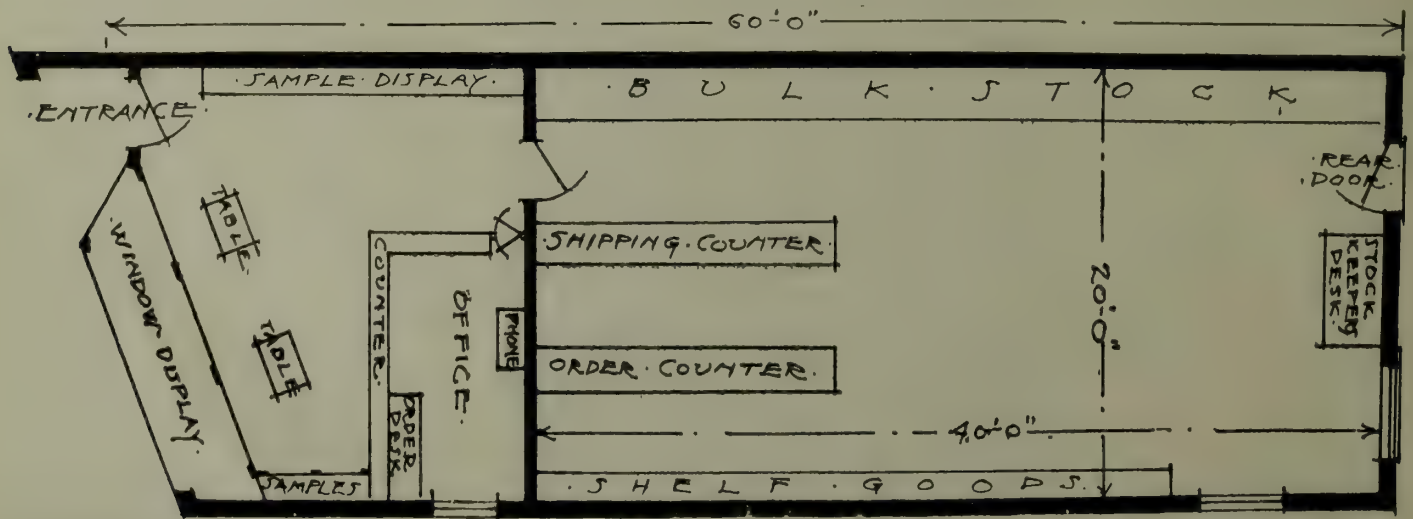
The main feature of the system is that, there is no stock carried in the store, as is ordinarily the case.

The stock is all carried in bulk at the back, and the front of the store, as seen

H. J. MUNRO, Winnipeg, Man.,
Who Sells Goods From Sample Only, and Demands Cash in Every Case.

by the accompanying plan, is merely an office with sample goods on display.

It is the intention of Mr. Munro to conduct the major part of the business by correspondence and by phone. Customers, however, will be welcomed into the front of the store, where their orders will be received by the attendant at the desk. The customer selects the goods from the samples that are displayed in the front of the store, or may select the goods beforehand from the catalogue, which is mailed to her home.



Catalogue Every Month.

Each month a catalogue is issued, listing the goods in stock, with prices, and these are given a liberal mailing list throughout the city. In mailing the catalogue, however, the district in which the store is situated is favored. The last two pages of the catalogue is ruled as an order sheet, and the customer is expected to fill out the list of goods required, and either mail, or hand it to the delivery man.

Cash Must be Paid.

An outstanding characteristic of the system is that all orders must be accompanied with the cash. From this it is evident what the impression of the proprietor is of the credit system. Mr. Munro states that he is surprised at the way customers respond to the cash principle.

Another unique feature is that customers who call for goods cannot take the goods with them. All goods are delivered. The reason for this is that when the order is taken by the girl or attendant at the front desk, the clerk is busy at the back putting up orders. And as each order is treated in turn, the clerk cannot leave the order counter to do up a separate article for a customer that calls.

Ground Plan of Munro's New Method Grocery Store. Note the Size of the Front Section in Comparison With the Stock Room, Etc.

Mr. Munro declares that should a customer call for a cake of soap to take away with her, she could not get it; that soap must be delivered. If the customer is not satisfied, the order is declined at the office.

This latter method is considered by Mr. Munro as the only way to get over the difficulty of having a clerk leave an order half done up to wait upon another customer.

Stock all in Bulk.

The stock is all kept in bulk in the spacious store room at the back. The order counter is where all goods are weighed and parcelled, the goods being taken from the stock in the shelves, which stock is put in fresh from the bulk goods each morning. The shipping counter is used chiefly for the mail order list.

Little Tendency to Overstock.

The feature of having goods in bulk only is that it facilitates the control of stock. There is not as much tendency to overstock when all goods are kept in bulk, where they can be checked over in a few minutes.

Every merchant is aware of the difficulty of keeping stock under proper control. Overstocking has been a long-standing abuse of the retail trade, and, no doubt, any feasible remedy will be welcomed.

The stock in Mr. Munro's store is checked every month, and a balance sheet of goods bought and sold is accordingly made out. At present Mr. Munro has six clerks and two delivery outfits in his employ. The number of deliveries will be increased shortly.

Relation of Retail Merchant to His Banker

To the Interests of the Former to Live up to Rules and Regulations of the Latter—The Handling of Drafts, Cheques and Deposits—Bank Prefers That Payments be Made by Cheque—How a Merchant's Credit Can be Benefited.

By F. C. Williams.

The retail merchant does not always fully realize what an important factor his banker can be in ministering to his prosperity, or he would give more attention to having his relations with his bank on a firmer, better basis.

Many merhants do not acquaint themselves with the rules of the bank. The first step of a dealer should be to make himself thoroughly familiar with the fundamental rules of the bank, and always strictly adhere to them. His banker is one of his best friends; therefore he should be treated as such. The merchant should adhere strictly and religiously to the rules and regulations of the institution of which that banker is in charge.

Collecting and Discounts.

The matter of looking after the collections in a retail business is of great importance. Learn to be a firm collector. Don't let your debtor run away with the idea that accounts can run for ever. Have a thorough understanding, and let each party follow out his part of the agreement fully. Many merchants cramp themselves and fail to make a success of business by having too much capital tied up in the shape of accounts. In the matter of discounting, careful judgment should be exercised in selecting accounts from which to take cash discounts. Give the bank good paper, that which you know will be met promptly and fully. Then when the bank sees your paper is always taken up when due, it will have a reflex influence on your credit and standing with it. In applying for a line of credit with the bank only ask for an amount in consideration of your actual financial standing, and after securing this credit be careful not to over-run it from time to time. Much better be under the amount of the credit than over it, thus showing the bank you do not wish to abuse any consideration conceded by them. Be careful in your promises made and be careful to fulfill them.

Handling Drafts.

In connection with drafts coming from other points, the merchant must bear in mind the fact that the bank is only acting as a collecting agent. It may be that another of its branches has discounted the paper, but in most cases the bank acts merely as a collecting agent. The bank has no direct interest in getting its customer to accept drafts which are not as they should be. But a merchant should, of course, before accepting drafts, be careful to see that a draft drawn on him conforms to the bargain made with the seller's representative. After a draft is accepted, even though the bank is only a holder for collection, the merchant should give it the same consideration and respect which he accords his other obligations. He should have a continuing record of all drafts accepted and notes given, wholesale and others. Properly, he should also run a diary, having a record of notes and bills coming due on these successive days so as not to overlook any maturing paper. If by chance he should be unable to meet acceptances at maturity, timely arrangements should be made with the drawer so that it will be recalled.

Deposits and Cheques.

Of course, it goes without saying that deposits taken to the bank should be arranged in such a manner as to give the officials the least possible trouble. The cash should be in proper order following the specifications printed on the deposit slip. One thing that a depositor should bear in mind is that the bank prefers that he should remain in front of the teller's wicket, while he is checking the deposits. For when the teller discovers a mistake, he likes to feel that the depositor having watched from the time of handing in the parcel, knows absolutely that he has not pilfered a bill. If there is included in the deposit and document or bill which the teller has not authority to accept, the depositor should get the manager or accountant to initial it before handing his parcel in. With regard to the pass book, all banks have a rule that the teller shall not enter deposits in them. However, in branches where the staff consists of but two persons, the rule is not always observed.

In drawing cheques, care should be taken to have the writing legible and to draw them in such a way as to prevent raising or alteration. For example, empty spaces should not be left before or after the amount of the cheque, as written in the body or specified by the figures. A heavy line should be drawn to fill up these vacant spaces.

So far as having acceptances and matured promissory notes charged to the account, as cheques are concerned, the customer can do as he pleases. The bank has little interest in the matter. Usually the bank will prefer that its customer deposit the whole of his cash receipts and make such payments as may be necessary over the counter by means of cheques on it. In this way the bank's interests are promoted and the customer who gives some attention to promoting the bank's interest in this way, will, no doubt, establish a claim to its regard.

From Ground Up in Grocery Business

Story of an Ottawa Youth Who Began His Business Career as Cellar Boy at $1.50 per Week and Who Has Been Successful—Made Many Friends When Delivering Parcels—Methods He Employs to get Business Outside of Regular Every-Day Demand—Makes His Windows Talk for Him.

By G. E. M. Hunter.

Industry, diligence, determination and application evidenced in any commercial undertaking will lead to success. The young man of to-day does not, it seems, realize the importance of these factors, and look upon them with sufficient seriousness.

To the young man who has any idea of entering the grocery business, and for that matter to those who have experienced a considerable measure of prosperity, the course adopted by T. W. Collins, 319 Wilbrod St., Ottawa, should prove interesting.

Began at $1.50 Per Week.

At thirteen years of age, after just a public school education, he joins Page & Co., Wellington St., as cellar boy at $1.50 per week, and although the labor was menial, yet performed it with sincerity and to-day is not ashamed to refer to his first days in commercial life. From this start he was promoted to the position of order clerk, but later took that of driver. Two years were spent with this firm, when he engaged with Andrew Shaw, who kept a grocery store on the site of Collins' present stand. Here he drove and worked for two years. Shaw then entered the 5, 10 & 15-cent business and Collins took charge of the inside end of the grocery department under his employer's direction and in six months practically had complete management of the business. He severed his connection with the Shaw business, but only for a week's time. Shaw sold to J. G. Greenwood, conditionally, upon Collins becoming manager.

Paid off Indebtedness.

Later on the business was offered for sale by Greenwood and a friend of Collins offered to buy it for him. The boy was not possessed of means, but gave four notes to his benefactors for the purchase price and in fifteen months paid off his indebtedness, together with interest.

The business at the start figured at about from five to eight thousand annually, and at the present, four and a half years since Collins took it over, the yearly turnover amounts to about twenty-five thousand.

Now how was this accomplished? What methods of buying, selling, accounting, store management, etc., were pursued?

Figures Out His Own Profit.

In the first place, since he has been in business for himself, he has never endeavored to ascertain the selling price of goods from other grocers. He figures his own prices, allowing what he deems a fair profit, and from this he never departs. Price-cutting he considers an evil which will eventually spell commercial ruin. His prices, he acknowledges, may be higher than those of other grocers, yet he obtains them, and in return provides fresh, dependable quality goods, and this compensates for any extra charge which may be apparent. To buy goods and feel that you are getting them fresh and of repute, and to rest contented that no one else is securing a better price than you are paying, is a great source of satisfaction to a customer. An aim of this grocer is to get exclusive lines of high-class products, and thus present to his customers the best that is purchasable.

Add 10 Per Cent. for Shrinkage.

In pricing perishable goods, such as fruits, ten per cent. is always added first on account of the invariable loss attendant upon the handling of such goods, and then the selling price is fixed. Fruit and vegetables are picked over every night, and all tainted goods discarded. It is thus maintained that a stock of vegetables will keep longer than in cases where they are not so sorted out.

Store arrangement obtains careful consideration. Goods are so placed that the clerk never has to leave the store alone, in order to supply a demand. Besides this, all package goods are placed together, and evry section of shelves is covered with net which ensures absolute cleanliness.

Shop equipment as regards modern devices, calculated to assist in the attention to custom and promotion of trade, are given due consideration and upon proof of value, adopted. Giving general satisfaction here are a vinegar cabinet, bacon slicer, double electric coffee mill, supplying both granulated and pulverized coffee, and computing scales.

Shop appearance Collins pronounces to be of utmost importance, believing that everything should have its place and be in its place. Appearance has a great deal to do with the impression on a customer as he enters the store, and this grocer aims to keep his shop in harmony with the quality of his stock—first-class. In this connection he suggests that where fruit is carried, for example, bananas, would it not be better to cut off the few one often sees hanging to the end of a long stem, rather than have the unsightly stock disfiguring the store?

Figures Profits on Sales.

"How do you figure profits?" Mr. Collins asked. "Supposing I buy four dozen pears for one dollar and sell them for $1.60, what percentage profit have I made? You will say, doubtless, sixty per cent. Well so say many others, but according to my way of figuring I do not agree with you. It cost me something to sell those pears, so that the sixty cents over and above the dollar was not all profit. I believe a man should figure his profits on his selling price, and as proof of this I instance the statement that a grocer makes when he says his year's business has been thirty thousand and his profit thirty per cent."

Mr. Collins would like to hear the opinions of other grocers on this point.

Promptness Adds to Sales.

'Phone orders receive first and paramount attention and as a result of this, nine-tenths of his trade may be so classed. The moment an order is received over the telephone, it is prepared for delivery, and no order is thought too small for attention. A concrete example of this might be given, namely: 29 deliveries were made in one month to the same house, the total bill being 58 cents, or two cents per order, and these were for yeast cakes. Now to the prompt handling of these orders, Mr. Collins attributes the acquisition of three good accounts. This is a strong point and an important one.

Prompt delivery is one of the chief characteristics of his business and as his trade is purely local as regards the district in which he is situated, it means much towards his success. He can deliver an order to his remotest customer within one hour after its receipt. Two horses are kept, so that a fresh one is always ready for service.

The general appearance of the store is a point which obtains a great deal of consideration, and one cannot but observe this upon even a cursory glance around the premises. And in connection with this store appearance arises the matter of the proprietor smoking during business hours. T. W. Collins seriously objects to such a practice, not only from the looks but from the attendant uncleanliness.

Windows Talk up the Goods.

The store is thoroughly cleaned every Monday and he gives this his personal attention, not taking any part in the trade transactions unless absolutely required. The three windows are dressed the provisions always on exhibition while the stock is out of the way, yet easy of access.

Suggests Fresh Goods to Customers.

Whenever any fresh fruit and vegetables are received he telephones all his customers who have 'phones, and in this way receives several orders he otherwise would not receive. At maple syrup time this practice is pursued, the result being that as many as forty tins have been disposed of in one day.

Mr. Collins never goes out collecting on accounts nor sends anyone else. He has only been out three times in three

Now what staff is there to handle this business? Two and a driver. These two comprise Mr. Collins and his sister, the latter being a bright business woman who can successfully handle the affairs of the business allotted to her supervision.

One thing Collins considers essential and which is no doubt by some considered of small importance, is a clock placed in a conspicuous place in the store. He has had several remarks about his clock and he believes it to be a means to securing trade. People passing any time of the day or night can obtain once a week and one always contains fruit. The display method employed to dress them is from the corner, so that a good view is obtained inside and outside of the store. Also this method permits of a good view of the store.

During the winter, butter boxes are used for displaying vebetables, etc., being cut on the slant. The stock is kept in the cellar. He thus has a sample of years. His method is to mail all accounts on the first of each month, then on the fifteenth check up all that are paid and those still owing are sent a second account. This plan works to his satisfaction in every way. Of course, conditions always govern the working of all such schemes.

Fish and oysters are handled in season.

a good view of the time-piece and also of the store and its contents.

And lastly, The Canadian Grocer stands high in the esteem of T. W. Collins. He claims to have learned much from it and reads each issue from cover to cover. He says any grocer who will do this carefully cannot but obtain valuable information.

Departmentizing a Grocery Business

A Laudable and Practical Method Originated by a Good Merchant in a Small Town—He Knows the Receipts for Provisions, Confectionery, etc., Which he Sells in Any Day, Month or Year—How he Traces Monthly Increases and Decreases to Their Respective Departments and Discovers the Causes for the Same —Has Absolute Knowledge of Every Phase of His Business — Turnover More Than $50,000.

J. L. Squire, of J. L. Squire & Sons, Norwood, Ont., has a method of his own whereby he departmentizes his grocery business.

This method he has simplified to make it within reach of every merchant who wishes to know exactly what he is selling from the various classes of stock which he carries in his store.

A study of this method, which is illustrated here, shows exactly what Mr. Squire does and what he knows about his business.

He believes in keeping in the closest touch with his transactions, because he maintains that only then can he discover the weak and strong parts to his business system from year to year. He therefore divides his grocery business into six parts. The departments include Provisions, Confectionery, Groceries, Flour and Feed, Seeds and Bread, as indicated by the accompanying drawings. It would be an easy matter, of course, for a merchant to add on as many more departments as he desired.

Sales Marked in Proper Books.

On the counters of the store he has cash books, or whatever you care to call them, in which he and his salesmen mark the totals of every sale, whether cash or credit. There is a cash book for each department; of course, one book could be divided or ruled so that it would be adequate.

In the provision cash book, is marked the total of each sale in provisions. These include eggs, butter, cheese, ham, bacon, lard, etc. The sales go down whether cash or credit. The same thing is done with confectionery, general groceries, flour and feed, etc.

Mr. Squire, Sr., attends personally to the bookkeeping. At the end of each day, or in the morning of the next, he totals up the sales for each department, as laid down in the cash books on the counter.

Illustration Showing How the Norwood Grocer Divides His Business Into Departments, and How He Keeps Track of Sales in Each.

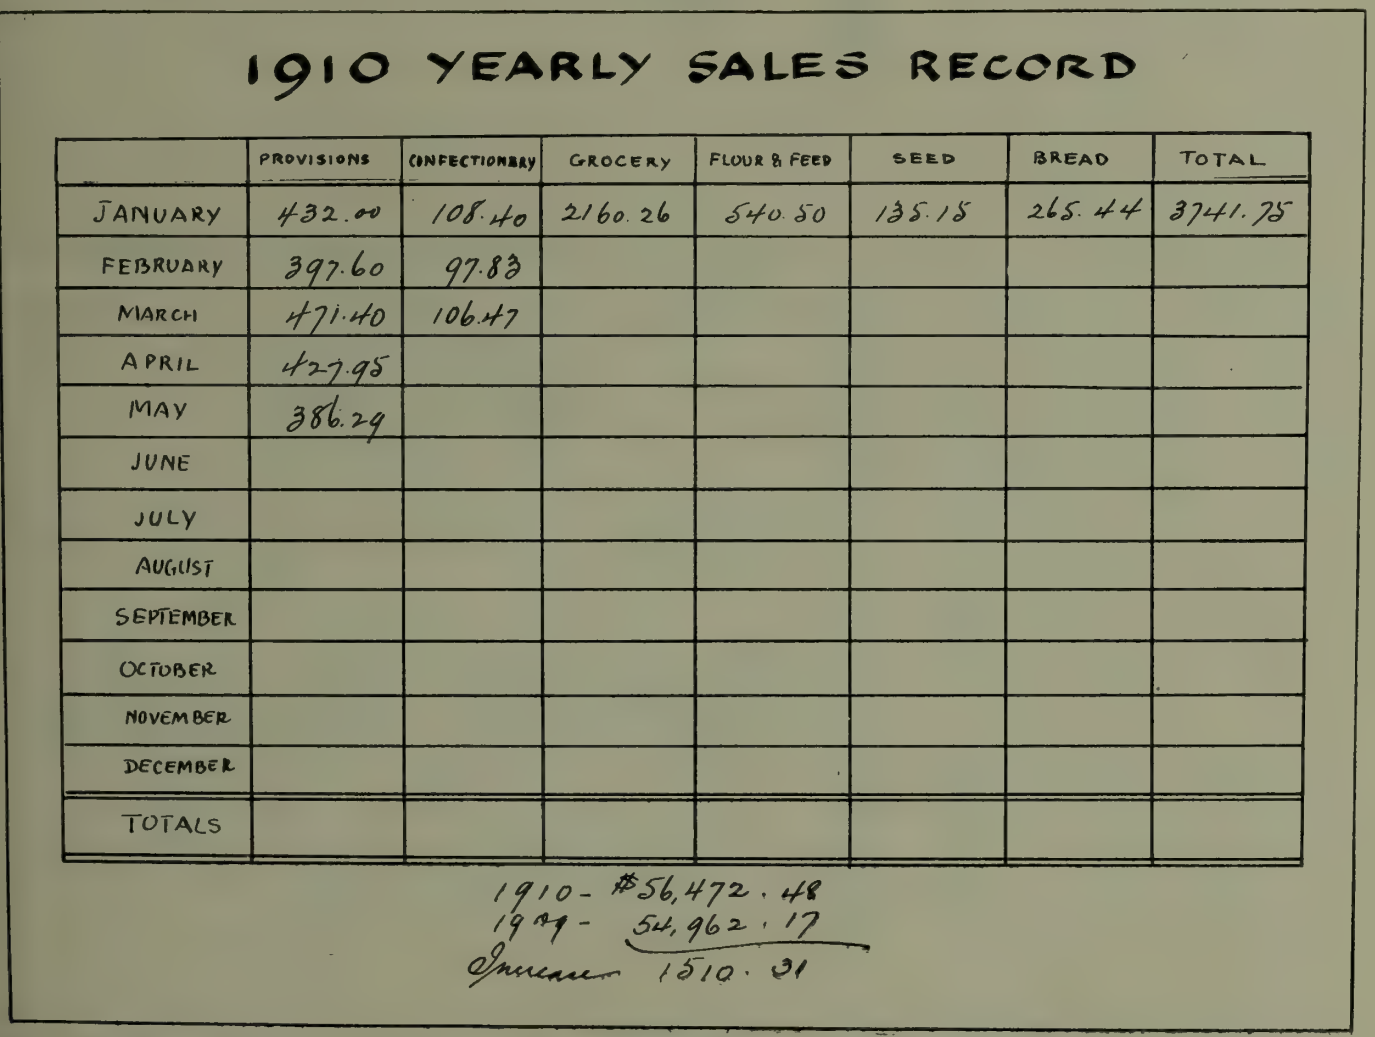
System is Simple.

"This might seem to be a lot of work," said Mr. Squire, "but it isn't. When a sale is made of flour or feed, for instance, it is a simple matter to jot down the sale price in the proper column."

If it is a cash sale, the trouble is over; if credit is given, it will have to go into the daybook anyway.

Use of Daily Sales Record.



Then Mr. Squire brings his "Daily Sales Record" into commission. This visions, confectionery, groceries, etc., which he sold every month in the year since he began business.

Traces Decrease to Proper Place.

The benefit of knowing this comes in here: At the end of January, 1910, for instance, let us say his total sales amounted to $3,510.76 for the month. By consulting the record book of 1909, he knows in a minute whether his total sales have increased or decreased; sometimes one occurs and occasionally the other. If there should be a decrease, he looks at the totals of each department to find in which department of his business the falling-off occurred.

not divide my business into departments the only thing I would know that during a certain month our total sales dropped below the corresponding month of the year previous. I could never or seldom be able to find the exact reason.

"If our grocery department shows a decline I use every means to find out why, and I may discover it is because a competitor was cutting prices that month. In this way I can lay my finger on the cause, and, therefore, do not blame it onto something else. If there is a remedy I apply it to the department that requires it, but if it has been due is kept in a book bound with leather and ruled similarly to the first illustration shown here. On Monday, Jan. 3, 1910, he sold $15.50 worth of provisions; $3.95 of confectionery; $70.76 of groceries, etc. His total sales during that day amounted to $125.16. (These figures do not, of course, represent his actual sales; they are merely used to represent his method).

One page is devoted to each month, so that he knows exactly how much pro-

When he acquaints himself with these facts he looks about to discover the cause.

"Sometimes I find a big falling-off in flour and feed, and that this is the cause of the shortage," he remarked. "I figure out the reason in my own mind why my sales of these goods decreased, and I likely find that in the particular month of the past year the farmers were short of flour and feed, and they had to come to me to buy baled hay, etc. If I did to peculiar conditions prevailing I let it pass—but I always know the cause."

Monthly and Yearly Totals.

Not only does Mr. Squire keep a "Daily Sales Record," which is also a monthly sales record, but he has a "Yearly Sales Record," as the second drawing will explain.

He totals his monthly provision, confectionery, etc., sales and places them in their respective columns. At the end of the year these are totaled and compared with the totals of the various departments of the year previous. If one of the departments shows a decrease, he finds out the month or months which were low, and in that way knows why. Knowing why, he sets about to prevent a recurrence during the coming year, if there is any possibility.

He is also able to discover just why increases were made in other departments, and aims to further develop these during the succeeding year. He has the increase or decrease each year marked at the bottom.

He can look back and tell at a moment's notice his turnover in every year he has been in business; he can tell the increase over or decrease from the previous year; he knows the total sales each month in any year, and their comparison with the corresponding months of the year before; he also has the total sales in each department at his finger-end, and how they fluctuated from month to month and year to year.

So much for his bookkeeping system. J. L. Squire has been in the grocery business in Norwood for almost 20 years and he has been successful. A few years ago he established a business in Havelock, a neighboring town. He attributes this success chiefly to his intimate knowledge with each department.

He is not a price-cutter, and he ignores unfair competition—in fact, he pays no attention whatever to competitors cutting prices. He aims to get a fair profit always; to buy right and to work economically. He utilizes practical labor-saving devices and has as little waste in his store as possible. His annual turnover is between $50,000 and $60,000.

PERSUASION THAT COUNTS.

The life blood of business-building is salesmanship—the power to persuade the people to purchase product at a profit. Of persuasion there are two kinds—direct and indirect. The persuasion that counts most of all to the end of permanency of trade is first, quality of goods and second, excellence of service. Patrons are illy served if served with anything but quality goods.—Arthur Frederick Sheldon.

A TALKING POINT FOR CHEESE.

All the nourishing elements in a gallon of milk are represented in a pound of cheese. Beef has less than half the food value of cheese. A pound of cheese yields three times the energy in a pound of beef. A pound of cheese can be purchased for less than one-third the cost of three pounds of beef. These constitute a little talk for the clerk some day when he is selling cheese or wants to sell it.

Sold Three Cases of New Line First Week

A Concrete Example Illustrating How One Retail Firm Uses Its Selling Power to Get New Business—Order-taker is Assigned a Different Article Each Week, Which he Talks up on His Regular Rounds—Gets the Selling Talk From Proprietors—Other Aids Used in Strengthening Sales Force.

The disposal of three-cases of a particular meat-sauce during the first week in which it was stocked in the store of the Barnsdale Trading Co., Stratford, Ont., was the result of the selling power of this firm.

Practically every retailer in Western Ontario and many in other parts of the country are acquainted with the Barnsdale Trading Co. or its reputation. It is a result of the industry of the man whose name it now bears plus the energy and ability of the present managers, B. T. Williamson and C. Wilson, who were schooled while in his employ.

These young men do not content themselves with the actual demands of their customers and transients; they sell goods not asked for but which satisfy, and attribute to this a great deal of the success the business has attained.

Order-Taker Sells Special Goods.

They have one method of introducing new goods to their customers which they claim works out successfully.

A Sample of the Advertising Done by the Barnsdale Trading Co., Stratford, Ont., to Attract New Business.

An employe each day goes out among customers and prospective customers for regular orders. Each week he is assigned a certain article which the firm either desires to introduce or to extend its sales. Mr. Williamson or Mr. Wilson give him the strong talking points in its favor. These, they themselves study carefully, and impart to him all knowledge—including of course the price—which they deem will be advantageous in making sales. Equipped with samples and every point in favor of an article, he has no difficulty in making sales. Articles showing the dealer a good profit are chosen.

Sell Three Cases First Week.

"Some time ago," remarked Mr. Williamson, "a traveler representing a well advertised meat sauce, called on me, as he had often done before, and advised me to buy. I said that we had had absolutely no demand for the article from our customers and that we didn't feel like stocking it.

"He urged, however, that we could sell it quite easily, so I decided to try a case. When it arrived I gave the order-taker a sample, told him all I knew about it and asked him to push it strong while he was getting his regular daily orders. There was a good profit attached to it.

"At the end of the week he had sold 3 cases, so you see that is one good instance of the value of our system for creating extra demand.

"In this way we work up demand for goods that cannot be called staples and this demand continues once our customers discover that we have sold them worthy goods. This leads to their acceptance of other goods talked up because they have learned to place confidence in our suggestions."

The same idea is carried into the store of the Barnsdale Trading Co. Whenever opportunity presents itself new goods are talked up and sold because customers place confidence in the firm. The quality of the articles purchased has also in a great many cases been raised.

Aids to Personal Salesmanship.

Besides the above methods this firm have many other devices which tend to sell more goods. They are very particular about their window and interior displays. In their large windows they invariably use show cards and price tickets. These they know actually sell goods which would otherwise remain unsold. These windows and counter displays act as silent selling agents for the manufacturer's products. So do their advertisements. They are strong believers in printers' ink and the newspapers are used to further create demand for their goods. They have a finely equipped store which facilitates the satisfactory handling of a large number of customers in a short time. Their warehouses are commodious and contain many labor saving devices. They have their own bakeshop and they advertise it extensively. There is system in bringing in goods and sending out orders. For instance they do not put up any orders at the time of sale; these all go to another department.

But all this will require an article in itself and it will furnish some splendid instances of systematic arrangement and the value it is to the business.

Create New Business Themselves.

The Barnsdale Trading Co. sell goods not only by filling the actual demands of customers. They create new business by their methods of suggestion and their abilities as salesmen.

That explains a great deal of the success which this company have experienced.

Food for Thought Done in Brief in Sentence Sermons

By C. C. Lawson.

Be bigger than your business.

Don't argue, its fatiguing and doesn't buy anything.

Don't be grum when waiting on a customer; maybe he feels bad too.

Treat your help courteously; they're human and may have trouble of their own.

Take an afternoon off and pay a social visit to your competitor; he'll enjoy seeing you and you'll both learn something.

If you're sick and can't be pleasant, go home and you will save money; your wife is used to you and won't pay any attention.

Make a friend of the traveling salesman; he knows many things that would benefit you, and he'll tell you about them if you treat him decent.

Remember that every merchant's show windows are among the biggest assets in his business when properly utilized.

Don't allow your eyes to be bigger than your trade or you'll have a surplus stock on hand when the bill matures.

Don't use baits in your business, it creates distrust among your customers, and is a losing proposition at all times.

Be friendly with your competitor; he's a good fellow and has the same things to contend with that you do, and you couldn't handle all the trade if you had it.

The merchant who can smile when misfortune overtakes him possesses an asset upon which a new business will be established; he sees in the wreck the lumber of rebuilding.

If you can't be a Marshall Field or a John Wanamaker, be what you can; the Lord made a million blades of grass before He made one tree, yet both were necessary in the creating of the world.

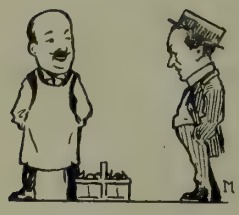
Don't labor under the impression that your business can't run without you present; the grave yards are full of ex-retail merchants, and people are still buying sugar at the old stands, and in many instances the business has improved since they went hence.

The Necessity of Watching the Store Insurance

The following paragraph on insurance was among the number on the bulletin issued by the National Credit Men's Association:

"A few business men of St. Louis connected with the Credit Men's Association have recently been gathering some information regarding the attitude of local merchants towards their fire insurance. They took the pains to visit thirty merchants drawn from different lines asking in each case whether his properties and stocks of goods were sufficiently covered and what methods had been adopted, if any, to prevent the burning up of his property.

"It was found that only one had been careful enough to see whether his policies were drawn to fit the risk. This merchant had gone to the trouble of asking his lawyer for advice. In three cases it was found that the insured were generating gas without the consent of the insurance companies and were thus vitiating their policies. In all cases it was found that the merchants were glad to get information. A list of the causes of fire was gone over with each merchant and special precautionary means described."



The report is much longer and advises that merchants have their employes acquainted with how to prevent fires and also the essentials of insurance. That is the salesman should not only know how to talk goods but he should be an amateur fire fighter and insurance inspector. The fact is though, that insurance is an important consideration. Every week reports are received from different parts of the Dominion and fire, in most cases, like other things the future springs upon us, comes probably when least expected.

When the coal dealer delivers a ton of coal he gets the coin, but the grocer's money for an order of groceries must usually wait the convenience of the consumer.

The Grocer Studying His Goods Sells More

How an Accident Moved One Dealer to Advertise and Use His Salesmanship in Selling Small Pears—Methods for Learning the Selling Points of New Goods and Extra Ones for Staples—A Cook-Book Given Away Containing Recipes.

By Victor Lauriston.

There are pears — and pears. A young man lounging into a grocery store the other day caught sight of a large basket of the small French pears, commonly used for pickling.

"How much do you charge for those things?" he queried, indifferently.

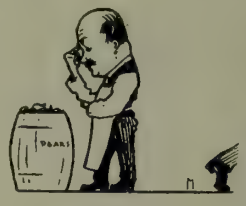
The grocer laughed.

"Oh, we'll sell them for anything we can get," he rejoined frankly, for the young man was a crony of his. "All the people around here buy the large sized pears for preserving. Small pears are a drug on the market. We sell a few now and then for pickling. One of our customers left these with me to get what I could for them. She'll be tickled to get ten cents a peck. There's absolutely no sale for them."

"Just send them up to the house right away," returned the young man. "I'll take them at ten cents."

"How many?"

"Every pear you've got there. They're the finest pears for preserving that can be got. It's a lot of work peeling them—certainly—but they're away ahead of the big kinds for sweetness and flavor."



Turned His Thoughts to Action.

The grocer sent the pears. Then he did some thinking. The result was that in the course of the next few days, instead of grudgingly taking from a few favored customers a bushel or two of small pears for sale on commission, he quietly went to work and bought outright for delivery in the course of the ensuing week all the small pears he could reach. On Monday morning he piled his window full of them, adorning the piles with neat and effectively worded show-cards telling about the best methods of preserving them and emphasizing their superior sweetness and flavor. Simultaneously (indeed, on the previous Saturday night) he commenced to push the sale of small pears through the medium of his regular advertising space, at the same time sending out circulars to several hundred regular customers, telling them all about these superior preserving and pickling pears, and about all the most approved methods of transforming them into preserves.

Pears Sold Other Goods.

He bought the pears outright at next to nothing. His pear campaign "caught on," and, since there were practically no other small pears in town till the ensuing Saturday, he turned over pretty nearly his entire supply at a good price, together with sugar, sealers and preserving accessories, including a paring apparatus for minimizing the objectionable hard labor involved. The enterprise was somewhat of a gamble, with a big risk of falling flat. Since it caught on, however, small pears have never sold so cheaply in that particular city as they did before that grocer saw his opportunity and grasped it with both hands.

Which is just an instance of the grocer snatching at new selling points in his goods, and reaping a consequent harvest.

The alert grocer studies his goods carefully for just such opportunities. Every now and then he will discover selling points which contemporaries never dreamed of, and which are unknown either to manufacturers or producers.

When a new line is placed with him for the first time, he will "try it on the dog"—he himself being the "dog." His own kitchen becomes a sort of laboratory where each new food product or preparation that comes into the store is tested out by the cook or housewife.

Most grocers do experiment in this way. Their experimenting is usually, however, prompted by individual curiosity rather than a desire for business advantage. The new product comes in. They are anxious to see what it is like. They find out, and are satisfied. There the matter rests.

Studies its Selling Points.

Here and there an enterprising grocer goes further. The results of his household experiments are turned to advantage in the pushing of his sales. He can assure the customer who regards a new line of goods with mingled curiosity and doubt that he himself has tried it, and found it excellent. He will know from actual investigation its certain strong point, its fine flavor, its food value, its suitability for certain purposes, its economy, the ease of its preparation. He can supplement the ordinary methods of preparing an article by new cooking schemes of his cook's devising. He has right at the start cards and spades over the rival merchant who knows a food product only by the label on the carton, and its method of preparation merely from the printed directions.

Cook-Book to Get Trade.

A grocer who features fresh fruits and vegetables in season and out of season cinches his trade by furnishing to customers a neat little cook-book containing recipes for preparing these products for the table. He doesn't stick to the half dozen old-fashioned methods of preparing carrots which have gone marching down the ages, but whenever he sees a new recipe, clips it and tries it out himself. If successful, it goes into the next issue of the cook book. The fruit or vegetable which can be prepared in a dozen new and attractive ways has an added selling value over tht which the housewife is accustomed to cook in three time-honored fashions. Hence, sales are accelerated to the great benefit of the grocer who sees the point, and snatches the opportunity.

To see such opportunities, a grocer must be continually wide awake, alert, and on the lookout. Every time he hears of a new use for a staple article, he should jot it down. He knows at least one use for every article in his store; but if to each particular use he can add another, he stands to double his sales and add to his customers.

WOMEN STARTED IN BUSINESS.

A mail-order house in Ohio has a new way of doing business. It offers to set women up in business and sales are all made from catalogues. Thus the woman carries no stocks, but she solicits for the house, and turns in any orders she may receive, for which she gets 20 per cent. commission. The house then sends the goods to her, and she passes them on to the purchaser. Thus if there are any repeaters they come through the agent. Journals do not express a high opinion of the success of the plan.

The modern grocers who handle coal oil have now the self-measuring pumps in general use.

Twenty-five Articles In One Show Window

The Idea of a Window Dresser Who Filled His Display Space With a Wide Variety of Articles—Ink, Canned Goods, Mucilage, Biscuits and Twine Were There —Suggestions for Concentrating the Gaze and Selling a Wider Range of Goods.

By Frank H. Johnston.

Imagine a grocery store with a window containing these goods:

Canned peas, several small bags of flour, writing paper, essence of vanilla, ink, three varieties of breakfast foods, twine, musk melons, gem jars, starch, pen-holders, apples macaroni, pickles, bottled jelly, soap,

"The Prospective Purchaser Passes by a Jumbled-up Window——" mucilage, biscuits, canned tomatoes, envelopes, molasses candy, scribbling books, meat sauce, matches and olives.

Yet this is an actual window in a store on a main street in a Canadian city—25 articles in all.

When one runs across such a display as this he often wonders how the store sells any goods at all. If the store interior is arranged on the same plan as the window the proprietor would have to possess an abundance of salesmanship ability to hold a customer.

Wears Out Little Shoe Leather.

Could this dealer ever have gone out on a hunt for new ideas? Evidently not. And it is just this sort of unsystematic arrangement, combined with other deficiencies which drive custom to competitors or to mail order houses.

Not only were there 25 varieties of goods in the one window—which, by the way, was no more than 6x3—but they were jumbled up almost as if the "window artist" had stood 10 feet away and thrown them in. Ink bottles sat on breakfast foods, and mucilage on canned peas, and the canned peas were lengthwise, crosswise and perpendicular.

This illustration shows the extreme to which a merchant will go in dressing a window. He thinks that if the entire floor space is covered and if he has a representative of every article in the store in his window always, he is going to sell them all.

The Power of Concentration.

This is a mistake. Suppose you were to go out on a purchasing trip, and you saw a window with 25 articles in it. Nothing holds your gaze or attention; you concentrate on nothing, and, therefore, you do not buy. You go further and observe a window containing, say, a meat sauce only, ticketed with a price tag and a display card reading: "Gives an appetizing flavor to the meat." You run your fingers through your loose change and you have a strong desire to purchase. The window trimmer has appealed to you and you are scarcely conscious of it. He has done it by concentrating your gaze.

The prospective customer passes by a jumbled-up window, but her attention is arrested by a neat display and she decides to buy.

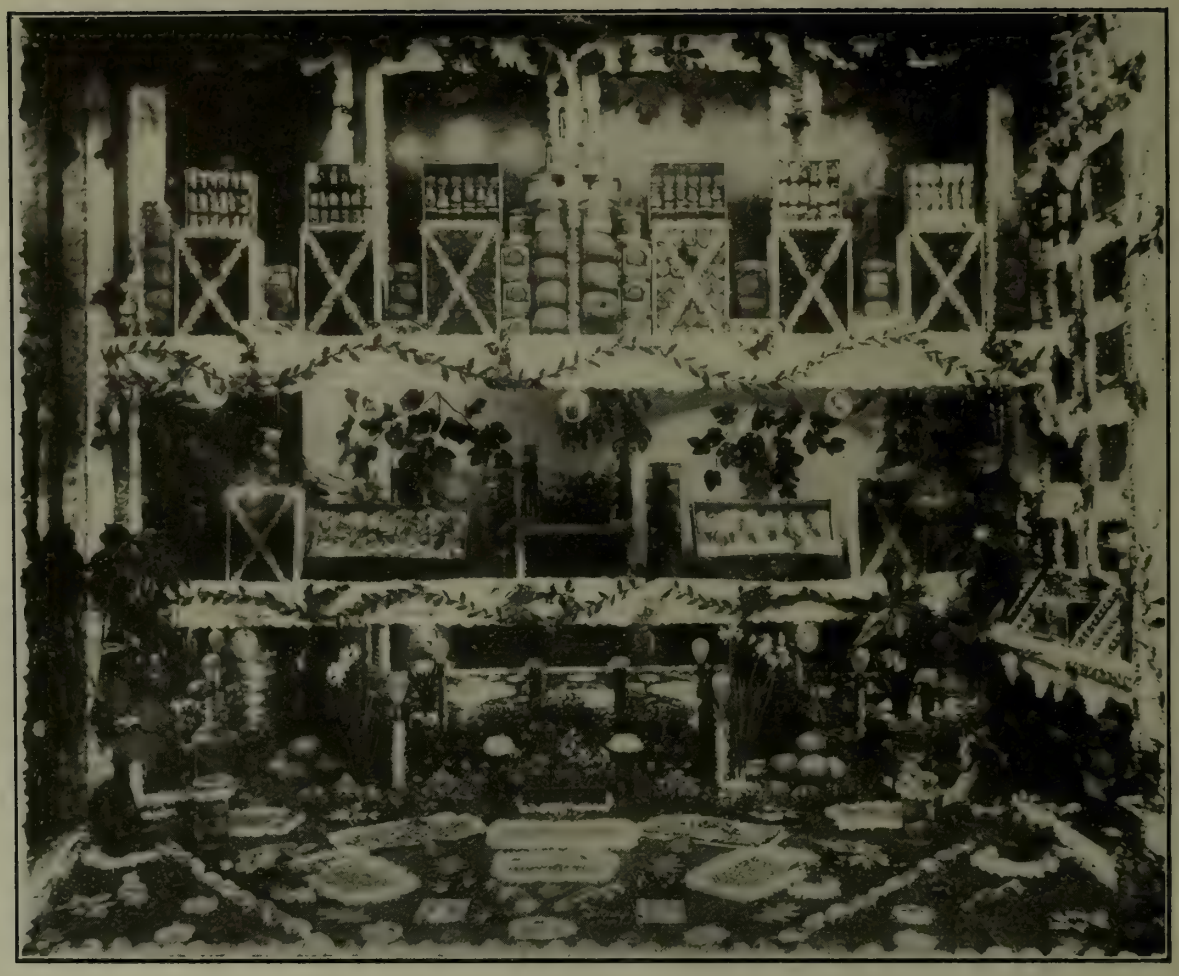
Once having created a new demand for this meat sauce, he concentrates on something else the following day or two days later. He gradually and systematically works up a demand for these extra goods—goods which do not come under the head of every-day household necessities. Once his customers have tested some of these articles they continue to ask for them. If their sales ever begin to lag he can quite easily arouse new interest in them by more window displays. He, therefore, has a sound, practical method for increasing his sales of goods which might otherwise only be asked for occasionally. But he must be systematic and particular about his displays. A jumble of goods will not sell themselves. The attention must be concentrated.

Can Sell Better Goods.

In the above list will be noticed flour. Flour is a household necessity. But it must be remembered that housewives are particular about their flour. Through special window displays, backed up by personal, mild persuasiveness, nine out of ten women can be sold a flour of undisputed quality, even if the price is higher than they have been accustomed to pay; and the dealer gets a better profit. Thus the window can be made to raise the standard of household staples by a display which concentrates the gaze.

"As if the 'Window Artist' has thrown them in."

Dealers should be cranks on window-dressing. The window is one of their most effective assets, and the most should be made out of it. While it is admitted that articles associated with one another, such as bacon and eggs, can be displayed together, no successful dealer will contend that a window of mucilage, biscuits, ink and canned peas is worth any consideration; it is merely a waste of time.



"—— but her attention is arrested by a neat display and she decides to buy."

LIKES A SKILLED SALESMAN.

J. Aubrey Rees, F.G.I., secretary of the Institute of Certified Grocers, England, said recently on behalf of the good grocer: "The woman at Christmas time likes to inspect the samples of raisins or deliberately choose those which will best suit her. The buyer of butter or of tea is, as a rule, pleased to be assisted in making selections by a skilled and competent assistant."

GREATNESS OF ENTHUSIASM.

Enthusiasm is the greatest business asset in the world. It beats money, and power, and influence. Single handed, the enthusiast convinces and dominates where the wealth accumulated by a small army of workers would scarcely raise a tremor of interest. Enthusiasm tramples over prejudice and opposition, spurns inaction, storms the citadel of its object, and, like an avalanche, overwhelms and engulfs all obstacles. Enthusiasm is nothing more or less than faith in action. Faith and initiative, rightly combined, remove mountainous barriers and achieve the unheard of and miraculous. Set the germ of enthusiasm afloat in your plant; carry it in your attitude and manner; it spreads like contagion and influences every fibre of your industry before you realize it; it begets and inspires effects you did not dream of; it means increase in production and decrease in costs; it means joy and pleasure and satisfaction to your workers; it means life, real and virile; it means spontaneous bed-rock results—the vital things that pay dividends.—The Melting Pot.

An Elaborate Christmas Display Used By Dixi H. Ross & Co., Victoria, B.C.

Xmas Windows Add to Selling Power

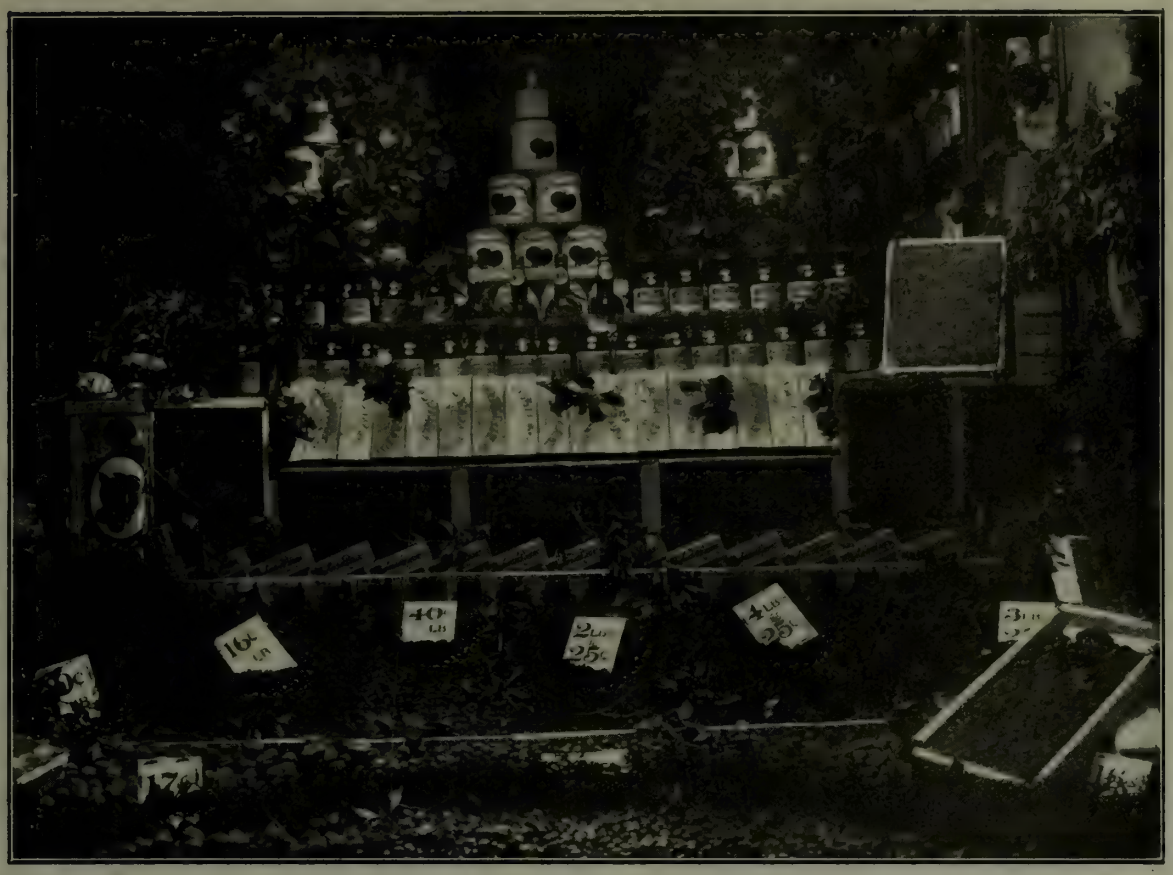
Sales Influenced by the Displays Behind the Plate Glass—British Columbia and Ontario Windows Which Appeal to the Desires of Christmas Shoppers—The Use of Price Tags and Show Cards—Ideas for the Window Artist.

Brightness and atractiveness should be outstanding features of Christmas window and interior displays. Six weeks from now the world will be entering upon that festive season once again, and in his window designs the grocer should plan to follow the festive spirit of the season.

It is a time for special efforts, for the grocer will find that all his neighbors are putting forth extra endeavors. There are several reasons why the grocer should employ his best ideas in his Christmas windows. In the first place, they add to the brightness of the festive season and it is an actual fact that neglect to put on a Christmas garb is noticed by the public, and not favorably.

Should Influence Sales.

The other reason is that the trade passing at this time of the year is exceptionally heavy in volume, and is of better quality than usual, and the grocer should attempt to secure as much of it as he can. His clerk, or the grocer himself, therefore, should give the windows that touch of salesmanship that will attract the trade. They should arrange the displays in order that they will be of greatest service as a selling influence to the staff.



A British Columbia Display.

The accompanying photographs of Christmas windows all suggest more or less the Christmas idea. No. 1 was dressed by Alex. McNeill, of Dixi H. Ross Co., Victoria, B.C., and gives every evidence of painstaking care in its elaborateness of detail. Flowers, lights, and other effects are employed to give the stock a pretty setting, and while it would have been easy to have jumbled a window with so many ideas, there is a uniformity about this one, and the suggestion of an artistic touch in so many of the arrangements that is possesses real distinction.

The floor itself must have been difficult to accomplish, and the mirror at the back and side extending upward a short distance, enhances the effect. Currants and raisins, divided by rows of peel, constitute the most of the floor, but dates and nuts are shown on trays, and the whole is brightened by well-formed leaves added here and there, while at the back are flowers and plants, just enough to add to the window, and not enough to spoil the effect. Colored electric lights back against the mirror in that lowest section will be noticed. The view from the street of such a window must of necessity be enhancing.

Above this are two shelves against a white background. The shelves have been neatly treated, and the goods are displayed to advantage. On the right-hand side are shown dried fruits in boxes and are so arranged that they admirably fit in with the general scheme.

A show card, bearing Christmas greetings, in any of the different wordings, would have given the window more of a personal character, and had price cards been used it would have had a greater selling power without the artistic effect being lost.

The stock used, such as currants, raisins, nuts, peel, olives, preserved fruits, dates, figs, etc., are appropriate for the season. The decorator has not stinted his use of extras to form a setting for the window. The lights add to the effect, the flowers are pleasing when used with good judgment, the mirror is a good idea and to secure the entire effect pains were taken. Slipshod methods are never advisable.

Price Tickets Appealing.

Window No. 2 was one shown by J. H. Kerr, Spadina Ave., Toronto. While simpler than No. 1, it is nevertheless an attractive window, and what may be called a good "talker." In the lower part are nuts, currants, raisins, shelled almonds, figs and other dried fruits. Sprigs of holly and strings of other decorations are noticed.

The back and upper part of the window is in keeping with the lower part. Preserved fruits are shown, with other dried fruits. Candied peel is noticeable and the design of the whole window is not complicated, easily arranged and is altogether pleasing. Those wreaths of holly around the pyramids of canned fruit make a great deal of difference to the appearance of the window, which is one that combines maximum effect with minimum labor.

A show card would have been acceptable, bearing the words, "Christmas Greetings," or "Peace on Earth," or "A Bright and Happy Christmas." Any phrase in that strain would have added to the personal appeal. The use of price cards is a splendid feature.

No. 3 was a Christmas window in Kirk Bros.' store, Bracebridge, Ont. It is a fruit window, arranged so as to look the same from the inside of the store as from the out. Fruit plays a large part in the purchases around the last two weeks in December, and the idea of devoting one display to fruit alone was wise.

The arrangement is regular, the apples, grapes, oranges, and pineapples being shown to advantage. Prominence is also given to the table raisins, figs and dates, and it may be termed a good all-round window, showing a quality of fruit that must have tempted everybody who passed the store.

The suspended tray of candies adds to the effect. What was said of No. 1 in regard to cards applies also to No. 3.

These windows ought to suggest new ideas to grocers who can combine ideas used in them with their own.

The Time for Best Windows.

Window dressing at Christmas time is good business. All the other merchants do it, and as the season comes but once in every twelve months, it should be cheerfully undertaken. The grocer should remember that the public admire progressiveness in this direction, and the cheap or tawdry window is "spotted" even by the children.

In every household at Christmas time the merits and demerits of the most prominent stores in the community are discussed and the grocer should make it a point to be classed among the best.

Some Methods of Introducing New Goods

An Easy Matter for Proprietor of Gilbert's Grocery to Sell to His Customers—Vanwart Bros. Use Personal Salemanship Over the Counter or Phone, Newspaper Space and Windows—Dealer Maintains That Profits Come From Fancy Goods Rather Than Staples—Wholesalers Criticized for Selling to Consumers.

For many years the retail grocery of Vanwart Bros., St. John, N. B., has been known as one of the reliable, moderate priced stores in that city, where anything purchased in the grocery or meat line can be relied upon, even if the price might sometimes be a little higher than at some of the neighboring places. Doing a good business in a conservative way, the proprietor has been satisfied to get a fair share of trade and make a fair profit. Of late, however, there has been a change, and it is evident now that an energetic effort is being made to get new business.

Believer in Price Tickets.

In conversation with the proprietor, Alderman John W. Vanwart, he said he had become convinced of the value of having goods displayed with price cards attached. "I used to think that it was not necessary to put prices on goods, and I have always done a good business; but lately I have come to the conclusion that in order to compete with the other dealers, some of whom are cutting prices to a large extent, I would use price cards, and I intend making them so attractive that I will get my share of the floating trade and still make a profit.

A Living Out of Discounts.

"When it comes to buying, I know I can do as well as any of them, for I invariably pay cash for all I buy. That has been the practice of the firm ever since we started. When my brother, the late Daniel Vanwart, was in the business with me, we figured that we made our living expenses out of the discounts we saved in this way.

"It has invariably been my practice when getting new goods, on which we made a good profit, to have them introduced to the customers when they came into the store, or to call attention to them to the people who order by telephone. For the past five years I have had an advertising space in one of the daily newspapers, and I use it for calling attention to new goods or to special sales. While I think newspaper advertising is good, I believe more good is derived from having attractive window displays, and prices marked plainly, especially when a store is situated like mine is, on one of the principal thoroughfares, with a constant stream of traffic.

To Fit Up New Store.

"Before the first of May, next, I intend moving to the opposite corner, which I own, and I will have it fitted up after the very latest models. There will be three distinct stores, one for groceries, one for fish, and one for meat.

"The fish department will be so situated that I can keep the store open two nights each week, as the fish dealers do now, without interfering with the early closing arrangement for the grocery and meat departments. I have also arranged for the purchasing of machinery for the manufacturing of sausages, bologna, etc., and it is possible that I may also erect a pork packing factory early next year. I have an option on a piece of ground that would be suitable for such a purpose."

Has Confidence in Ability of a Good Salesman

"A good salesman can sell anything if he makes up his mind to it," said Walter Gilbert, proprietor of Gilbert's Grocery, St. John, N. B., in referring to the science of salesmanship.

"There is nothing I like better than to introduce new goods to a customer, and nine times out of ten, I will guarantee to sell them. I attend personally to the buying of goods, and before I stock a new line I satisfy myself that it is something that I can honestly recommend to my patrons. Of course, before stocking I make sure that we are allowed an honest profit on the goods.

"Invariably when new goods arrive they are placed in a prominent position in the windows and on the counter, and the clerks are instructed to call attention to them. It is a rather delicate matter, this introduction of new lines, and should be handled very diplomatically. It is an easy matter to bore a customer by talking too much, and usually more is accomplished by asking them to sample the goods.

Customers Test the Goods.

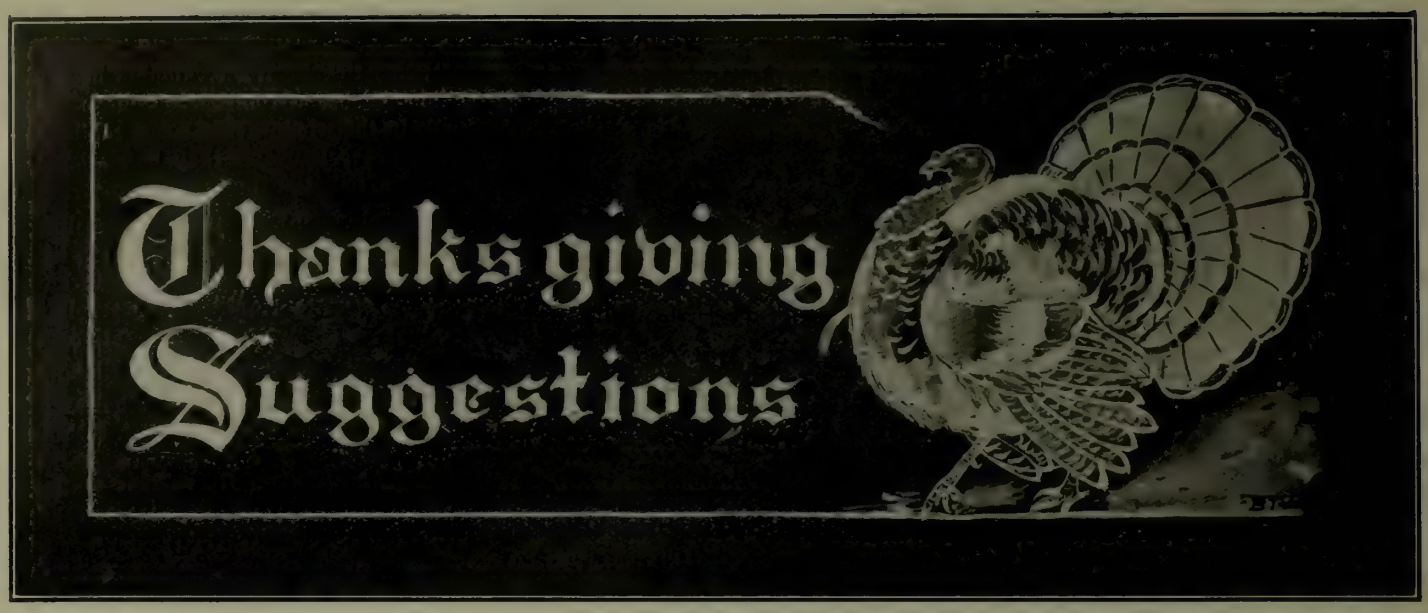
"As a rule, when anything new comes in that can be sampled, that is in the way of cooked or preserved lines, I have some opened, so that it can be tasted and seen. Most people when they have tasted will buy.

"Price tickets are a valuable help in selling goods. Oftentimes I have put goods in the window that I feel confident would not sell unless they had attractive price tickets attached.

"An important matter in the selling of goods is to keep the store neat and clean, as I believe that no matter how good stock may be, it will not sell if the surroundings are not attractive.

"There is another matter not altogether in this line, but nevertheless of great interest to retailers, that I think ought to be remedied. I mean the attitude of the wholesaler to the retailer. Wholesalers are always complaining that they are not protected in the buying of goods; that manufacturers sell direct to the retailers, thereby cutting into their trade. This complaint would be all right if the wholesalers protected the retailers, but they don't. As it is now, many of the wholesalers will sell direct to consumers. I know of many instances where customers of mine have gone to the wholesalers and ordered flour, canned goods and various staple lines in quantities from 5 pounds upwards.

Profit From Fancy Lines.



"They do this, and then expect that manufacturers should not sell direct to us. Why, for one thing, they do not carry the line of fancy goods that we want, and it is the fancy lines that keep me in business. As far as the staples are concerned, I don't care whether I sell them or not. It is the fancy lines that give us our profit. If The Canadian Grocer can assist the retailer in working out this problem satisfactorily, it would be doing a great service."

WIELDS A POWER OVER MONEY.

There can be no business success without human support. The man who cannot interest and appeal to men—whose personality repels and antagonizes—is a business outcast, neglected by opportunity and blackballed by fate. His ideas, however brilliant, will wither away, untested—his ingenious plans will never see the light of practical use, if he cannot arouse human interest and cooperation.

Some men seem to fairly radiate power. The moment you come face to face with them you can feel penetrating little power waves that melt your iciest reserve and thaw out any spirit of stubbornness or opposition you may have brought with you.

You can't say "no" to one of these men. You can't make him say "yes" if he doesn't want to. And so these men master customers, control employes, persuade and influence all types and dispositions of human nature, and almost wield a power, it would seem, over inanimate money itself. Power that brings crisp yellow-backed bills out of barren places and turns failure to success.—R.H.

A Good Display Card for the Present Season—The Original was 22x8 Inches in Dimensions, The Card-Board Being a dark gray color.

Display Cards Aid Personal Power

The Selling Value Placed Upon Them by One of Canada's Best Retailers—They Suggest New Goods to Customers and Actually Make Sales—When a Dealer Does Not Use Them There is a Waste of Selling Power—Examples of Good Cards Easy of Manufacture.

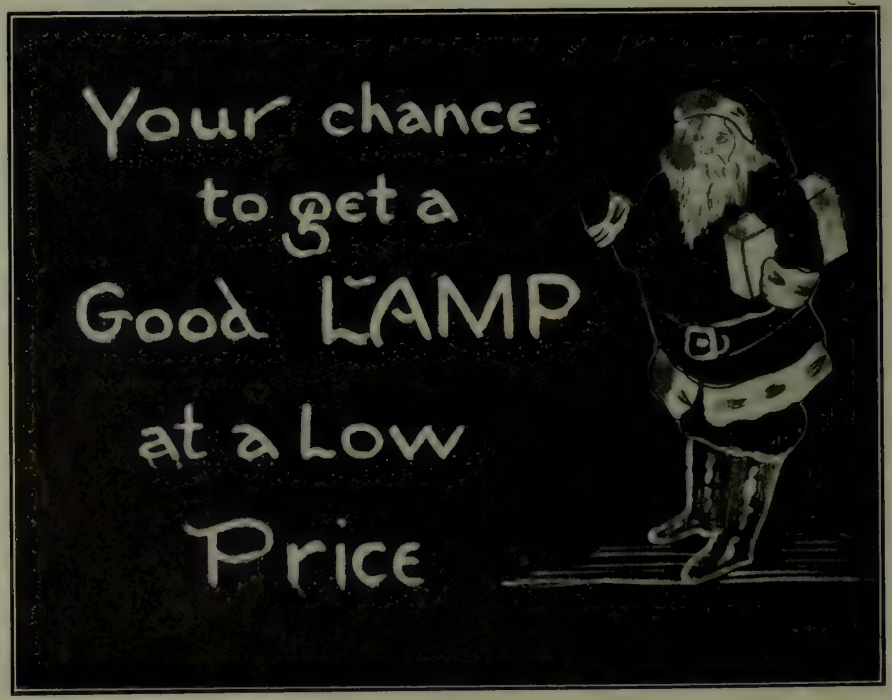
Among the many methods used for successfully creating extra demand must be classed the display of show-cards in the store and in the window. They are utilized by some of the best dealers from the Atlantic to the Pacific and those who use them assert that they are real positive business getters. Therefore they are useful as creators of demand for goods, which otherwise would remain unsold or which would be purchased somewhere else.

One of Canada's most scientific retail dealers said recently: "You see those cards in the window and around the walls; well we believe them to be worth good big money to us. We try to have them attractive and we find they suggest goods to the purchaser which we might not think of mentioning and which she otherwise would not ask for.

"Whenever we have a display in the window we prepare a couple of these cards and everybody reads them.

"For instance that one over there, 'you save 21 cents on every article in this window' was bound to bring results because every woman who passed the store read it and a good percentage of them were sure to buy.

Well Worth the Trouble.



"It is one of our regular methods for selling more goods and we will certainly continue to use show-cards because they pay us back in real money.

"A thanksgiving card such as 'Thanksgiving Suggestions,' with a turkey in one corner adds a tone to the window and besides makes the passerby turn over in her mind the requirements for this festive season."

Such things as cranberries, baskets of delicious fruits, nuts, pumpkins, etc., could be suggested in the window.

Not Hard to Prepare.

"Practice," continued the merchant, "is all that is necessary in writing show-cards. I write all those cards myself and while they cannot be called works of art yet they serve the purpose. You see that figure on the card, 'your chance to get a good lamp at a low price,' is simply tissue-paper which I have pasted on the card. The turkey you will see is original, drawn with the brush. One can often get a good picture from a magazine which will suit the lettering. A touch of the brush around the edge makes it look at a distance as if it were genuine.

The Orginal of This Card was 14x11 In ches in Dimensions, and Almost Black in Color.

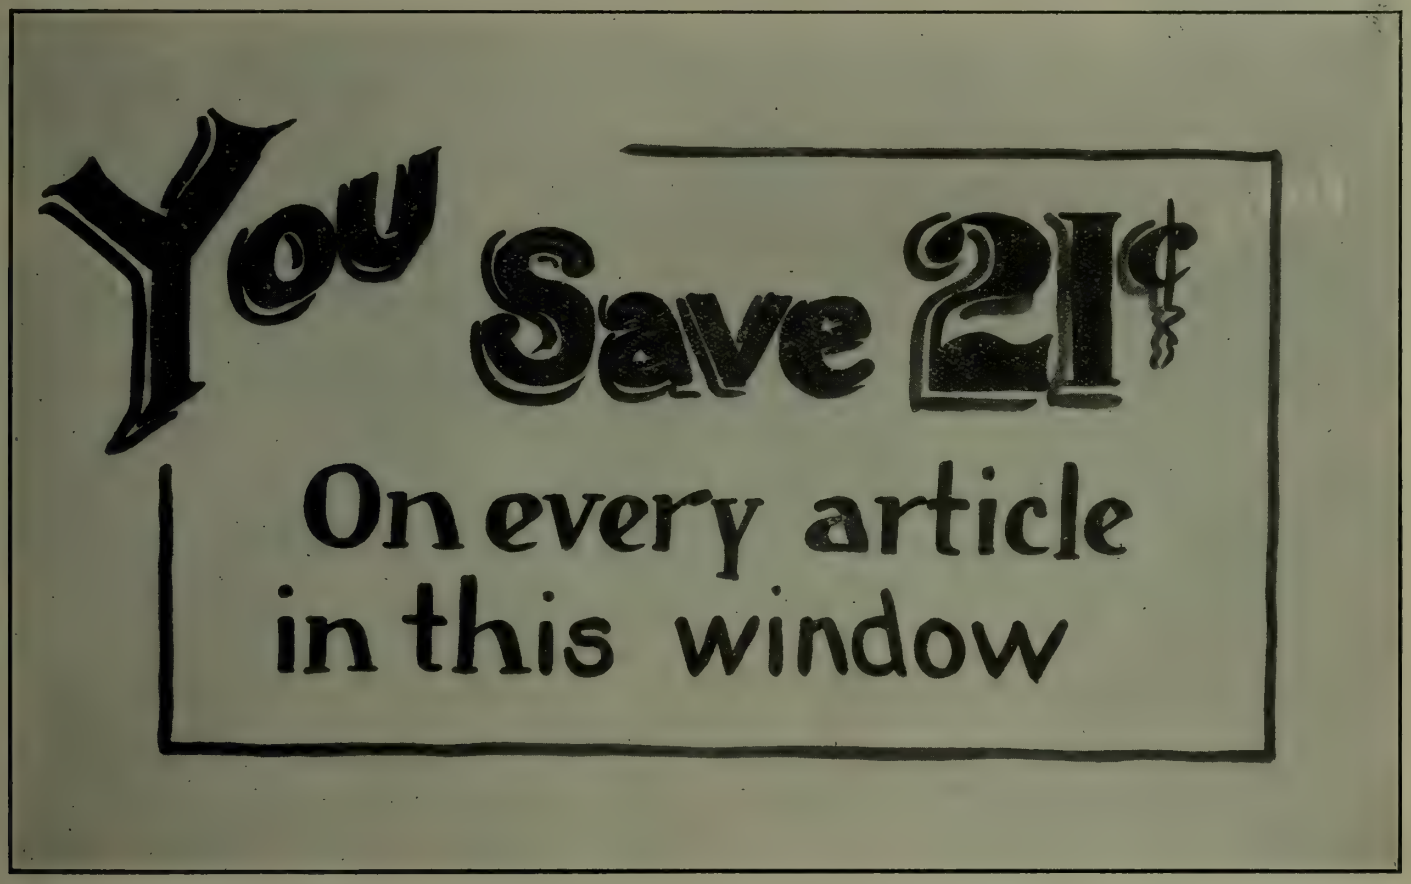
"I buy my ink supplies from a school of lettering, and have also obtained some advice from them on the work. It's simply done and is quite enjoyable once you have mastered it."

Brightened Up by Colors.

The originals of the cards shown herewith are in colors with the exception of the thanksgiving card which is black and white. The addition of some color often adds to the power to attract, but care should be taken to not over do it. Different colored cardboard is also used as explained in the underlines of the accompanying cuts.

Scores of instances are known in which display cards have actually been known to attract business. They therefore ought to be made the best of in the merchant's repertoire of methods for selling goods which his customers would not purchase were it not for the gentle suggestion they receive.

Adding to Personal Power.



The dealer must remember that it is he who is talking when he uses cards in his windows, attractive goods on his counters and shelves, and advertising in his daily paper. By these methods he is adding to the power of his own personal persuasiveness and that of his salesmen, and therefore keeps in motion one great selling force which is irresistible only when a competitor out-generals him.

To this end every dealer should work. In no place can the old motto, "Put your shoulder to the wheel," be used with more appropriateness than in the retail grocery business. Where a merchant neglects to use every safe method within easy reach for enlarging his business, there will be found a waste of man-power which is only to be deplored.

If the show-card is a business-getter it ought to be used. Because it is used by some of Canada's largest dealers, it may truly be said to be a business-getter even if special instances were not known. It is one of the links in the chain of salesmanship methods of these men and it is instrumental in increasing their business, to which goal all merchants ought to direct their strongest forces.

Distinct Style of Lettering is Good Trade-mark

"It is always best to use one general style of lettering for all your show cards," claims one strong advocate of the display card. "By this I do not mean that the card writer should confine himself to strictly one style or alphabet, but that all cards throughout the windows and interior should be of the same lettering for the certain occasion or season.

This Show-Card Was Reduced From 22x14 Inches, the Original Lettering Be ing Done in Green, Black and Red, on a White Background. It was Valuable as a Business Getter.

"When a departure is made from a certain style of alphabet, the departure should be general. and all cards and tickets throughout the store lettered in the new style, as otherwise the appearance of the windows and interior, viewed as a whole, is apt to look patchy and disorganized.

"This plan also has a tendency to give identity to your establishment, for a distinct style of lettering creates a distinct impression ; in other words, it serves as a sort of trade-mark which people quickly recognize."

Grocery Business Needs Aggressive Men

So Maintains a Limestone City Dealer Who Sounds an Optimistic Note—There Must be Brains Behind if Success is to be Acheived, He Says—The Part Improved Equipment is Playing in the Modern Business of To-Day—"If You Want to Hear the Hum, Keep A'Going," One of His Mottoes.

The present is an age of progress, of advanced ideas, of business systematized to a science, and of methods that economize time and labor. Efforts of men have been directed for years to this end, and in the results that have been attained the changes wrought in the grocer's business sphere are not to be underestimated.

This phase of the grocer's development is emphasized by John Gilbert, a grocer of Kingston, Ont., who declares that there is a wide scope for the use of brains in the grocery business, and the better the facilities, the greater results can be accomplished by the grocer who possesses the requisite efficiency and capability.

Value of Modern Fixtures.

Referring, for instance, to the electric coffee mill and labor it saves, Mr. Gilbert says: "No more turning the old mill until your face becomes red as a tomato, and between gasps you try to ask a customer if she requires anything else in sugar, lard, tea, butter, etc.

"The fixtures in a modern grocery store are marvellous. Look at the meat slicer, cash register, counter-check books, new system of keeping accounts, silent salesmen, spice receptacles, self-measuring oil-pumps, counters, etc. Certainly there should be fewer bald heads among future grocers.

"Yet with all these appliances you must have clerks with brains, and possess brains yourself.

"A great deal can be said in favor of displaying odds and ends, and drawing customers' attention to the articles and the prices. It is astonishing what can be disposed of in this way. Get the stuff right on the counter, change often, and if the goods don't sell, give them away.

Keep Out of the Rut.

"Change the location of your goods from time to time," says Mr. Gilbert. "Make the shop look different every week. Don't get into a rut and leave things in the same place for years until they are as much a part of the landscape as the counter itself. You can point out goods in some windows that have been there for the past five years.

"Some grocers have demonstrations of their own specialties. A demonstration can do a lot of good, if carried out along the right line, and it certainly means a big thing for the merchant to build up a trade for his own lines. The use of brains in business is really what gives one man the advantage over a competitor, and, to quote from the sages:

'May blessings fall, on each and all
'Who rightly use the means entrusted;
'But shame on wealth that keeps in stealth
'The talents dull and dim and rusted.'

A Store Front Bulletin.

"A few blackboards telling people of new goods or bargains, afford an effective method of appealing to the people. Red and colored crayons are good for a change, instead of the ordinary white.

"It is a mistake to pile up vegetables, fruit, etc., leaving them to catch dirt and dust. It is not sanitary. A list of the same, neatly written on the blackboard, answers well. Have a sample of the goods inside the store. Outside displays are going out of fashion, and it is well.

To Hear It Hum.

"Clean windows with good displays within," maintains Mr. Gilbert, "speak to the passerby of the carefulness and attention to detail of those within. There is nothing so inviting as cleanliness.

"When I see cabbage, corn, and such turned out on the sidewalk, and left there, I wonder what class of customers buy at such a store.

"If you want good trade watch these points, and you will not be heard complaining of dull times. Life is generally responsible for what you make it. So is business. If you want to hear the hum, keep agoing."

ACCOUNTS SETTLED AT 30 DAYS.

Bookkeeping Methods of an Ottawa Retailer.

In T. W. Collins' grocery store in Ottawa all accounts are settled at thirty days and he takes advantage of all discounts possible. He further makes a daily check of his credits and enters them in a book kept for that purpose which enables him to make a comparison between any days in any years.

Another point in this branch worthy of mention is the manner in which he divides his day's receipts and sales. He has a book in which is entered each night the amount of credits, cash received, paid on account and paid outs, for that day, so that he can instantly tell on comparison with the corresponding day of the year previous, how his business is progressing.

Some grocers, claims Mr. Collins, calculate the amount of their day's business from the cash they have received during the day, plus the credit sales, not deducting any paid on accounts which may have been received. As the latter item refers to a previous day's business it cannot be counted with the current day's receipts. Thus according to his method this amount is shown separately and he secures an accurate statement of the day's actual returns.

Handling of C.O.D. Parcels.

His "C.O.D." system is unique, but simple. The driver's returns are checked twice a day and all receipts entered in a "C.O.D." book which gives full particulars concerning the sale and the cash received. Some customers who are splendid pay 'phone in an order and ask to have it sent "collect." Probably when the driver gets there either he or the customer hasn't sufficient change and consequently the goods are left without payment. A parcel delivered in this way is marked "C.O.D.," but where the goods are not to be left without receipt of cash, the parcel is marked "C.O.D." with a cross through the O. This code the driver and employer knows, but the customer is unaware of the significance of the marking, so no unpleasantness results.

In buying, Mr. Collins believes that, where two or three travelers quote the same price on the same goods, the one first quoting should be given the order. The policy of playing one traveler against the other is not countenanced, practiced or admired by him. And again, buying in large quantities for sake of price is not indulged in for the reason that ready money is considered worth more than an extra stock of some line so purchased.

Some grocers await the day of judgment with a smile, that is if the recording angel's day book shows the charity they have dispensed and the patience they have exercised during their brief earthly sojourn behind the counter.

Standard of Stock Raised 40 Per Cent.

Selling Methods Employed by Bracebridge Grocers to Increase Their Business —Examples of How They Educated Their Customers to Purchase Good Tea, Baking Powder and Flour, All of Which Allowed Good Profits.

By E. J. Kirk.

It is not easy to measure the ability that all good salesmen should possess, namely, the faculty of creating a market for an article that has been a slow seller, or creating a demand for something that is worthy, in view of its profit and quality, but, unpopular because of its high price; of selling a new preparation, or the discarded "Jonah" of an old factory. The really successful salesman of to-day has inherited this ability, or has acquired it through practice, for we feel justified in saying that it is within the reach of all.

Sold New Tea With Profit.

Some time ago we planned the sale of a parteiular blend of tea not stocked before, and which had previously little or no demand, but from which we were in a position to obtain a fair profit. We first demonstrated it by supplying our customers with samples given us. Then we advised each clerk to diplomatically mention the new brand to each customer, and to carefully explain its superior flavor, special value, etc., to them.

The result of this salesmanship plan was that a great many housewives took home a trial package. Our sales began with a rush, and now this tea holds 75 per cent. of our total tea sales. We believe, too, that specializing on good teas attracts new business.

The same energy was directed to the selling of a certain blend of baking powder, having a good profit attached, with splendid results. This brand is known all over our country now, and holds 90 per cent. of our baking powder sales.

Had Confidence in the Flour.

In our flour and feed business, we found it necessary to specialize on one brand of flour, and in order to build up this department, we realized that the quality of this brand must be worthy and reliable, besides producing a just profit. The clerks were instructed to guarantee every bag, and also to offer to take back any flour that did not suit a customer. Our own confidence in this brand won its favor, and our efforts were crowned with success.

If a dealer has any inactive lines he wishes to move out, he should study their selling points, and from time to time talk them up, and watch the results.

Quality of Stock Raised.

Salesmanship ability should be turned toward fancy shelf goods, and goods out of the ordinary. The standard of groceries sold can easily be raised. This has been proven time and again. In the last five years, through the recommendation of better goods to our customers, we have raised the standard of our grocery stock fully 40 per cent.

The Value of Store Front Individuality

There is an Advertising Value to the Artistic and Distinctive Front—High Class Goods Not at Home in an Unattractive Store—Builders too Prone to Erect The Monotonous Rows of Similar Buildings—The Front usually Bespeaks the Quality of the Business Done.

By B. Haley.

It is frequently found that a dealer is stocking high-grade manufacturers' articles in a store which does not present a good appearance. The front is not attractive, and has nothing distinctive about it.

This is not as it should be. Every salesman behind the counter knows how necessary it is to 'present a good front' to a customer in talking up a parteiular line of goods. It shows confidence in the article. (A salesman, of course, should not be 'all front.')

Likewise the front of the store ought to indicate the confidence of the merchant in his goods. It ought to give the store the personality and attractiveness commensurate with the quality of the goods offered for sale.

Monotonous Store Fronts.

Yet this is one of the points in which many merchants are inefficient. With that splendid capacity for endless sameness which so many builders show, the store fronts that most dealers possess are very monotonous, even often impractical. Certainly, they rarely make use of their full advertising opportunity.

This fact comes from failure to realize that a great part of trade is secured for a retailer by the appearance and earmarks of his exterior and his window contents.

The character of his service, his patronage and his goods is loudly proclaimed by the physical appearance of his place.

The store front is like the type with which an ad. is set up, and the taste that it displays. For some businesses it pays to sacrifice appearance somewhat for quantity of display room. But for most cases it should not be a question of how much display room a store front can be made to yield, but how many people can you induce to give real attention to whatever display room you have, be it large or small.

Ought to Merit Attention.

It is not the large window or the large store front which has the biggest chance —it is the quality of appeal which can be achieved. It is far more effective to put one single article in a window, if that article and the store front, etc., which form its setting, are of the kind that merit attention.

It must, therefore, be remembered that the store front has considerable to do with the persuasion of particular customers—those who are likely to purchase the best goods at good profits. A dirty, inartistic store, possessing no quality or distinction is not only a non-selling agent, but it repels custom.

Store System Adds to Selling Possibilities

R. Barron, Ltd., Big Toronto Retailers, Place Great Confidence in the Methods of Doing Business—Systematic Window and Interior Displays, a Part of Their Regular Plan—An Instance of How They Facilitate the Sale of Bacon—Advise the Getting of the Confidence of the Public.

When the manager of any big Canadian firm passes away, the general public shake their simple heads and, with a sigh, exclaim upon the insignificance of man, after all, when the immense works continue in its activities as if nothing had happened. The assistant manager, probably, is ordered to fill the vacancy, there is a promotion among the entire managerial staff and the business of the house gives no evidence of the internal readjustment. The work is carried on as smoothly and regularly as under the old regime.

As the business grows, system is necessarily established for economic purposes, but now it controls every and all departments automatically. Thus, in one sense, is the business considered well-established.

System is involved in practically every public and private activity. Our railways, postal service, banks, hotels, amusements, they are all conducted on a business basis through the system applied to each. System is truly the science of civilization.

Just as it applies to every other activity, in the same manner it enters the retail grocery business. Mail order houses have their particular systems by which they extend their efforts throughout the country. In the cities and larger towns prominent retailers have developed the grocery business to such an extent that the Canadian trade is unsurpassed anywhere for its progressive methods, and in all these stores system is the central idea.

Adds to Selling Power.

As a matter of fact, every merchant has some kind of system, although in not a few cases they may be aware of it. It is the smooth-working system that gives character to a store, even if the staff should consist of but the proprietor himself, and just as system facilitates the business and is instrumental in bringing success to the big industries, in the same manner will it assist the grocer.

This is particularly true with the larger stores, and is illustrated in the establishment of R. Barron, Ltd., Yonge St., Toronto.

A grocery business with over 35 employees must be well organized and only a casual glance around the interior of Barron's store conveys that impression. Neatness, cleanliness and order are strikingly apparent. Each employe is attending to some particular business, but there is no confusion.

"Everybody has his or her duties to attend to, beginning with the first work in the morning and one thing follows another throughout the entire day," said a member of the firm.

As in many grocery stores, receiving, making up and delivering the orders, occupy practically the entire morning, but the preparation previously made, facilitates this work considerably. For example, one of the clerks in Barron's at one time during the afternoon was slicing breakfast bacon with a slicing machine, weighing it in pound lots and wrapping it in light paper. It was then put in a refrigerated case for use the next day. This is but one of numerous time-saving methods which simplify work when the staff is busiest and time is more precious.

One of the features of Barron's store is the attractive display of goods. Good commonsense salesmanship is demanded of the clerks, but the assistance of window and interior displays are always taken advantage of. In the general system of the store, time is allotted for all this work. In other words, it receives the attention it deserves.

Have Confidence of Public.

The success achieved by this firm is due to the efforts of the members. They cater to a large and high-class trade and years of square dealing have won the confidence of their customers. One of the members of the firm referring to this point said that while salesmanship was the greatest asset of a clerk or grocer, it was primarily based upon confidence.

"When the customer finds, by experience that her grocer is honest in his business dealing and in his suggestions concerning new or better quality of goods, she trusts him afterwards and invariably depends upon his word in questions pertaining to purchases," he said.

The Practice of Economy.

This is but one store and what may be said of it pertains largely to others, although it is a question if there are any two stores with similar methods. But they all strive, or ought to strive, for the one end—to conduct business along the most economic and modern lines.

"What pertains to the large grocery store," he affirms, "should pertain to the small one. When a grocer says he has no time to arrange a window, shelves, show case or counter, or to have a general system in effect, there is a bad cog in his store machinery. If there is no time to properly look after his purchases, his stock, his finances, there is likewise something out of gear and he should overhaul the machinery of his store system and carefully examine it.

"Once a grocer resolves to establish a system, he will find it a great lubricant and if properly attended to, it will improve as it begins to take hold of his business."

Use of Mailing List in Selling Extra Goods

Customers Can be Influenced to Purchase More and Better Goods, and Prospective Patrons Can be Won Over by Appealing to Them on Something Special—Suggestions for Collecting Names for This List—Talks May be Sent Out With Monthly Accounts.

By A. H. Harvey.

To the grocer who desires to send regularly a little semi-private business talk to his customers, and to those he may hold in prospect, a Mailing List should prove valuable.

It is one of the cogs in to-day's system of business. It, as is well known, is one of the big features of the mail-order houses.

The grocer in the city sending out his monthly or semi-monthly accounts—if he sends them by mail—might as well make an effort to secure new business by sending a store announcement in the same letter. It may be that some of his patrons are not regular frequenters of the store. In that case he often wishes for some means of reaching them, of telling them of new goods he may have received. True he can do this over the telephone, but the modern grocer does not depend upon one method alone. He combines his salesmanship powers and in the latest combination the Mailing List is beginning to be recognized as an important factor.

To Interest the Farmers.

The grocer in the country town who numbers among his customers not a few farmers should not be content to wait until they call at his store once a week or once every two weeks whatever the case may be. Imagine the length of the Mailing List of the catalogue houses! They have reduced this method to a science. The Mailing List referred to in this article is nothing but the same idea applied to the retailer's business.

It is not necessary to send business letters only with accounts. The best Mailing List includes numbers of people who may be only occasional purchasers. It also looks after the new arrivals and to get the best results some attention must be devoted to this department.

For Strawberry Time.

The most important question the grocer asks himself in examining his own particular case is "Is it worth while?" Here is the idea in its simplest form. Supposing strawberry time is approaching. The grocer is willing to handle this early fruit, but he is not sure of the demand that may be made upon him. He takes half an hour some night and writes an announcement. He knows that the most people want strawberries in their season and he requests that those wishing a daily service, or delivery every two days or every Saturday as the case may be will let him know. He points out the mutual benefit. It will assure fresh fruit and satisfaction to the customers. It will do away with the old trouble of holding the fruit in the store. It is impressed upon the reader that she is going to share in the profits afforded by this system. The grocer also states that special rates will be given for large purchases necessary for preserving.

The grocer takes it to his printer where it is set up and printed forms are returned to the grocer who completes his plan by sending them to the persons on his Mailing List. It would be possible to have fairly large post cards made, and thus envelopes would not be necessary.

Seasons Should be Watched.

There are many selling points that the mailing list can emphasize. There is the sugar season, light breakfast foods, Christmas, Easter, Thanksgiving, etc. In regard to the latter the home at this season takes on a festive air because of the fact that absent sons and daughters are going to be reunited to the fold once more.

Goods that are not purchased every day are going to be asked for, and that means "new business worth while going after," to use an expression heard frequently in commercial circles.

The dried fruit season is soon going to reach its heaviest stage. Mincemeat pies, fruit cakes, etc., all combine to make a heavy demand for currants, raisins, peaches, pears, apples, peel, etc. A grocer with a Mailing List would prepare a letter something after this style:

YOU WILL NEED NEW RAISINS AND CURRANTS.

Fruit crops have been short this season. In Spain the raisin crop is the lowest in many years. The California raisin crop is likewise much below the average. The same is true of prunes and currants. The result of this shortage in all dried fruits are general higher prices. We realized, however, that you would want the same supplies as in previous years, and while there has been a short crop still you will hardly notice the difference in prices. We offer you this season new raisins grown and gathered in Valencia, Spain. You will be delighted with their quality, and in this respect they are even better than last year.

We have taken particular care to secure new crop currants. We call your attention particularly to a select line from Patras, Greece. For best results in baking at this season we know our customers want only the best in these fruits. Realizing this fact we have given particular attention to the quality of these stocks and it is with the utmost confidence that we guarantee satisfaction and request that before you make your purchases you examine our stock.

Prices for best quality :—
Raisins, per lb. ——
Currants, per lb. ——
Orange Peel, per lb. ——
Lemon Peel, per lb. ——

That at least gives an idea of the form of the letters. The grocer, however, suits himself as to what he shall use. The mailing list is nothing more or less than a salesmanship talk to prospective buyers. Several prominent grocers are known to have by dint of attention and determination made their mailing list of great service to them.

How to Compile Mailing List.

This list can be prepared by securing from the city directory the names of the best people in the immediate district, prospective buyers, of course, included. In time new territory can be experimented upon. New arrivals in the vicinity should be carefully watched for. Persons moving to another section ought not to be overlooked. Those who never responded at all might be gradually dropped from the list. Attention devoted to this part of the salesmanship plan will prove remunerative if the appeal is right and reasonable.

Those who have tried it with success assert that it is not costly. Anyone who is thinking of adopting this idea should thoroughly examine it. Get prices from the printer, consider the various methods of carrying out the general scheme, because if it has been a boon to some grocers there is every reason to believe that it can be made to help the general trade.

Some grocers by the use of handbills prove that the idea is a sane one. They may prefer the bills, but one objection to them is that boys are not always the most trustworthy creatures, especially when there is a hole under a sidewalk that will nicely hide the entire bundle. It is not as easy to get a bill into a house as it is a letter. Besides people as a rule are prejudiced against the handbill, while there is something personal in the letter that demands attention.

Intelligent, Tactful Persuasion Sells Goods

Big St. John, N.B., Dealer Thinks This Should be the Aim of Clerks—They Ought to Use Their Selling Power to Create New Demand—A Method Used to Move Out Goods Not Asked For—Decides Upon a Special Every Day—Clerks Are Told to Talk Up These Specials Both in the Store and Over the 'Phone—Faith in Window Displays.

That it pays to keep a store clean and attractive-looking, to have plenty of well-written price tags attached to goods and to impress upon the clerks the necessity of calling attention to new lines or some special daily leader, is the experience of F. E. Williams, the senior partner of F. E. Williams & Co., retail dealers in groceries, meat and fish, in St. John, N.B.

Mr. Williams is also engaged in another business and this work has been taking up a large part of his time. He is now devoting more attention to the grocery business, however, and as a result many improvements have recently been made. A new lighting system has been installed, silent salesman show cases have been put in and the premises brightened in many ways.

Retail grocery store of the F. E. Williams Co., St. John, N.B. The entrance to the meat and fish department is just back of the scale on the counter. The office is located between the two stores with windows looking into each. The cash register which may be seen behind the counter is used for registering the sales, but the change is made by a young lady in the office. She receives carbon copies of the sales made, stamps the bills and hands the change to the clerk through a window. Two silent salesmen showcases used for cooked meats, butter, cheese, etc., may be seen at the left in the foreground.

Places Big Value in Show Windows.

The show windows, upon which the success of a grocery business so largely depends, are now systematically trimmed every Monday morning and at times some are changed two or three times a week. There are six big windows, four for the grocery department and two for the meat and fish display. Only bright, fresh stock is offered for show there and price tags are almost invariably attached. The fruit window, as well as the meat, fish and vegetable windows is rearranged and fixed up every night and the lights are kept burning until about eleven o'clock. This has been found a most effective way of advertising, for although the stores are closed at seven o'clock, people passing by cannot fail being impressed by the inviting appearance of both the goods and the prices.

"I believe that it pays to use price cards freely," said Mr. Williams. "Articles in a window or a show case without a price tag are not nearly as attractive as with the price on. People see a price and if it appeals to them they will say, 'give me some,' whereas otherwise, they would pass it by. Sometimes it is the price that is attractive and sometimes it is the goods but it is a good plan to make both attractive.

Talk Up Leader Each Day.

"The arrangement of goods on the shelves is another important matter. We are specializing in our shelves, trying, as near as possible, to have one kind of goods to a section and putting title and price cards on them, practically making silent salesmen of them. Each day some leader is generally brought forward and displayed on the counter or in the window and every clerk is notified to call attention to that article during the day. This also applies to customers who use the telephone. A customer on the 'phone likes to be told anything new or any special line, but they don't want to be bored with a long list of articles. By specializing on one thing each day I find we accomplish more in the long run.

"A scheme I have found to work very satisfactorily is the sending of letters to customers or prospective customers. When trade is slack we send out a lot of these letters calling attention to the store and what we sell. These are sent especially to people who only occasionally come to the store, to try and make regular customers of them. We have found them to give good results. We specialize in these letters to a large extent; for instance, we would call attention in one to our fruit, in another to cooked meats for picnics, luncheons, etc., in another we would dwell on our teas and coffees, or our butter and eggs, meats, fish, etc. We can trace results directly to these letters in many cases.

"Of course this is a rather expensive way to advertise, when you count the cost of printing, postage, etc., but it seems to be effective and once we get people interested enough to come here we endeavor to keep them coming by giving them good service and good value.

Cleanliness in Salesmanship.

"There is a growing tendency on the part of the people to go only to stores that are cleanly in appearance. For that reason we keep everything sanitary. All foods that are likely to be affected by exposure to the air or flies are kept under glass covers. Dried fruits, biscuits, butter, cheese, and all goods of that sort are kept under glass. We also find it a good scheme to keep a silent salesman in the grocery store, stocked with a full display of cooked and smoked meats. This serves as a reminder to people who might not be going into the meat department.

There are twelve employes in the stores, eight clerks, (four in the grocery and four in the meat department), two teamsters, a cashier and a bookkeeper. The cashier's desk is a glass enclosed room between the two stores and accessible from either department. The telephone is also placed convenient to both.

What Intelligent Clerks Can Do.

Mr. Williams is a firm believer in the selling power of a clerk, and he thinks the right kind of a man or woman can sell a customer many things that would otherwise remain unsold, by a little intelligent and tactful persuasion in showing new lines of goods.

Replying to a question as to whether he found it advantageous to handle meats and fish in conjunction with groceries, he said he had always carried on the business that way, and he thought it worked well. While he might do more business in either line if he were giving it his whole attention, he thought that in conducting the two together, one helped the other. As it is, the clerks can go from one department to the other at rush times and avoid keeping customers waiting.

Early Realization as to Salesmanship Value

Alberta General Merchants Depend a Great Deal on Selling Goods Not Asked For—Co-operation Between Manufacturer and Retail Dealer a Fundamental Principle—Selling Power Should be Made a Scientific Study, They Maintain—What an Edmonton Retailer Says on Giving Goods Away.

"We had not been in business long before we realized that judicious suggestion constitutes one of the most essential factors in the art of salesmanship. This fact was continually impressed upon us by the very instructive articles which appeared in The Canadian Grocer, a business auxiliary we highly appreciate."

This is the view of H. Arnold, Arnold Bros., general merchants, Black Diamond, Alberta, on the question of The Selling Power of the Dealer.

This firm believes in getting behind worthy goods which allow the dealer a fair profit. Its members believe in mutual beneficial relationship between manufacturer and retailer, in order that the most satisfactory results can be obtained.

When There is No Square Deal.

They think that if a manufacturer, however, neglects the dealer, by giving away all the dealer's profits in simply creating a demand from consumers, then the manufacturer is not giving his agents—the retailers—a square deal. In such a case it is not in the interests of the retailer to push such a manufacturer's goods. On the other hand, if the manufacturer gives the dealer a fair profit, and at the same time aids him in creating demand through consumer advertising, and also giving him the necessary selling points about the goods, then both will profit. They maintain that the dealer then has reason to use his salesmanship—which all should possess—to sell the goods so that the benefit will be mutual.

Must Study Human Character.

"We have learned by experience," says Mr. Arnold, "that a truly successful salesman must possess considerable knowledge of human character, and exercise the utmost tact, for the reason that the method adopted to suit the temperament of one might be disastrous if applied to a different type of individual.

"We think, too, that any form of suggestion should appear spontaneous, quiet and natural, without effort or excessive enthusiasm, which are apt to create embarrassment.

Cater to Different Classes.

"With reference to our own trade, we have customers to whom we can apply unlimited suggestion without any danger of causing offence; we have as well, an extreme class, whose peculiarities must be studied, recognized with the caution of diplomacy.

"We do not believe that a variety of different attitudes displayed appropriately to suit corresponding dispositions is necessarily a taint of hypocrisy, when principles of integrity are not violated, but rather the outcome of courtesy and forbearance.

"We have learned by experience that while any fool standing behind a counter can fill an order by dictation, it requires a man whose personality permeates his business, and whose suggestive art controls his customer's choice and decision, to multiply his sales by creating demand and insuring satisfaction.

"We can affirm without any sense of exalted ability, that, owing to the practice of applied suggestion, we have sold many goods that would otherwise have remained on the shelves; we have thus advertised our stock, maintained confidence, and proved our reliability."

It will be observed from the above, that Arnold Bros. aim to play the fair part. They have faith in the goods they sell, and because of this faith, they are not afraid to recommend to their customers goods not actually asked for. They, however, maintain that if the manufacturer wants the dealer's co-operation he should recompense him for any interest taken in his product. Without this recompense or in other words, fair profit, the dealer has no right to spend his time in persuading his patrons to purchase an article. It means, it is claimed, loss of time, energy, and money, any one of which would give sufficient reason to neglect to talk up such goods. These merchants believe they might better use their capabilities, which they know they possess, to turn over goods which actually pay for the trouble, the risk and the investment in them.

Few merchants claim that they possess salesmanship in selling an article at a loss. Almost anyone can do this, but they might better leave the goods on the shelf. Even then they are occupying space which might be devoted to displaying profitable and more worthy wares.

Those Who Give Away Goods.

"One will often find," remarked an Edmonton dealer not long ago, "that merchants will use big advertising space in their newspapers, fill their windows, their counter, their floor space and shelves with an article which they are either giving away, or selling at a loss—spending money in orer to lose more, it practically is.

"These men might better not stock such goods," he declared, "if they are losing money on them; but if they want to give them away, they can do it without spending a lot of money."

A Scientific Study.

Arnold Bros. take the same view of salesmanship, and it is their aim to reduce it to a science, for, character studying, they believe, is a necessary attribute to the scientific salesman.

"These are considerations," they say, "that will appeal to any progressive merchant. To those who seek a solution to commercial problems, or desire to build their business on a scientific basis, we would again very heartily recommend them to study The Canadian Grocer, through whose mediation we, ourselves, have acquired invaluable assistance."

Increasing Sales by Demonstrations

By This Method Customers Obtain Confidence in the Store and Salesmen, Maintain Wm. Metcalfe & Co.—When Added to Personal Salesmanship It Makes a Strong Selling Combination

By demonstrations, Wm. Metcalfe & Co., Berlin, Ont., create demand for new goods and extend the demand for goods which have already been introduced. This is one of their many methods, among the most important of which is suggestion and persuasion by personal conversation between the man behind the counter and the customer.

Mr. Metcalfe relates an experience with a particular breakfast food for which he aroused a great demand because he believed it to be in his own interests, quality and profit considered, to get behind and push this article. He kept up this demand inspite of the fact that extensive consumer advertising was being done in Berlin on a somewhat similar product offered by another manufacturer.

"When we first stocked it," he said, "we had a demonstration and at every opportunity talked it up to our customers. It sold splendidly. Since the other food came on this market we have still sold this in greater quantities simply because we considered it to be in our interests to do so, and we lost no chance for advancing its sales. We show it on the counter and display it in the window regularly, all the time keeping it in front of the people.

"We have given an order for as much as 60 cases at one time for it.

Between Retailer and Manufacturer.

"In fact when the other people came in here they wanted us to stock their product: I said 'no' we didn't care to and we were told that we would have to. Of course we said we wouldn't have to and very soon there was a big campaign going on.

"To offset this we opened up a campaign ourselves; we talked up the quality of the goods we were interested in, advertised them in the newspaper, displayed them in the window and consequently lost no business.

"This was because our customers had confidence in us and accepted our recommendations."

Wm. Metcalfe & Co. are not afraid of any mail order competition. Mr. Metcalfe believes that it is nobody's fault but the merchant's if anybody goes past him to the catalogue houses for goods.

If a man possesses sufficient salesmanship, he maintains, he will not fear such institutions.

Can Depend on the Goods.

The Metcalfe store is one that has gained a reputation for quality goods. Therefore no employe is afraid to recommend them and the goods showing the best profits, other conditions being equal, are pushed. This is claimed to be half the battle in salesmanship, for no dealer can raise the standard of quality of goods purchased by his customers unless he sells them better goods than they have been getting. Neither can he conscientiously suggest the sale of a new article unless he knows it bears an undisputed quality and that it will give the best of satisfaction.

Obtain Dealer's Advice.

Customers who deal in the Metcalfe store depend on the salesmen's suggestions for practically all their purchases. Mr. Metcalfe gave another instance of this.

"A customer often asks for canned peas and usually does not mention the brand; we sell her the kind we stock because we get a better profit on it and because we can tell her it is a splendid brand. Because she has confidence in us she takes it even if she asks particularly for another."

System in this store has much to do to facilitate service and this adds materially to the selling power. Goods all come in and go out at the rear of their commodious store which includes a confectionery manufacturing department, coffee roasting room, tea-blending department, etc.

Confectionery Demonstration.

When the confectionery department was opened the general public was invited to inspect the entire manufacturing plant. This was done to forcibly point out its cleanliness. Right from the beginning it gained the confidence of the public since they knew they could depend on the purity and cleanliness of its products. From that time its success was assured. This is another instance of the value to Wm. Metcalfe & Co. of demonstration.

Mr. Metcalfe is opposed to the plan adopted by some manufacturers of fixing their prices to retailer or consumer. This he maintains is contrary to the fundamental principle of commerce and declares that it clogs the wheels of advancement open to real merchants who have the salesmanship and ability to conduct a profitable business.

Story About a Jailbird Who Made Good

Telling of His Advancement in the Factory—How he Sent Two Pale-looking Girls Out in the Sunshine to get Clematis and a Little Color, and of the Intervention of the Employer—Why Power Flows to the Man Who Knows How.

By Elbert Hubbard.

Once upon a time there was a Jailbird in a small town in the State of Iowa.

This J. B. had had all that he wanted, and it was his firm intention, if he ever got another chance, he would show what he was made of.

Many other J.B.'s have made similar resolves.

After he got out, most everybody gave him the Icy Mitt, but finally he accepted a position (or as some might say, found a job) in a factory.

He started in at four dollars a week, working with the boys, for jailbirds cannot afford to be either fastidious or finicky.

They have to take whatever offers.

So the J.B. started to work.

Now, in every shop or store there is always some one—man, boy or girl—who knows where things are.

If you set ten girls at work in a room you will find by the third day that nine of those girls are asking the tenth these questions:

Is this all right?

Where is the thread?

What shall I do next?

And the tenth girl tells the others whether the work is right, and where to find things, and what to do next.

In one week this tenth girl will be on hand a little earlier in the morning, in order to lay out the work for the day; and at night she will stay a little later, in order to put things away.

And she will show in various ways that she thinks of the work outside of working hours—between the time she goes home at night and the time she returns in the morning.

Of course the quibbler will here interpose an objection to the effect that the probabilities are that the ten girls will be equally stupid, and one and all be absolutely listless unless inspired by the fear of the Blue Envelope, or the coming of the footsteps of the boss.

I think, however, this need not be seriously considered, for the fact is that at least one person out of ten is not only loyal, but has a goodly grain of executive ability that can be cultivated through exercise.

Responsibilities gravitate to the person who shoulder them, and power flows to the man who knows how. And so it happened that before the J.B. was in the factory a month boys were going to him asking where things were. When they ran out of one kind of work they would ask him what they would do next; and he, knowing the sequence of the work, would advise them.

J. B. and the Boss.

Now, there be employers who are Proud and Overbearing, but others there be who have Commonsense. And so it happened that the man who owned the factory where the J.B. worked had a modicum of Commonsense. Seeing that the J.B. knew where things were and what should be done next, and that the J.B. put the work away at night and got it out in the morning, and planned things at home, and picked things up instead of walking over them or kicking them aside, why the Boss encouraged the J.B. and raised his wages.

So the J.B. evolved into a Right-hand Man, and in time came to know a deal more about the details of the business than the Boss, and I believe eventually married the daughter of the Boss, inherited his money and became sole owner of the Factory, but of those things I am not certain, so I do not record them.

"Now in every shop or store there is always someone—man, boy or girl—who knows where things are."

But the little incident I am about to record really happened.

One day the Boss saw two girls who worked in the factory coming in with a basket of wild clematis. These girls proceeded to festoon the pillars of the big room with the beautiful plant.

"Who told you to do that?" demanded the Boss.

"Why, Mr. So-and-So," referring to the J.B.

"Did you send those girls away during working hours after weeds?" asked the Boss shortly after of the J.B.

"Certainly," was the answer; "you see, I noticed those particular girls seemed very white and not very strong, and sort of nervous and worn—they say they have things tough at home, and I just thought I would try to improve their complexions and spirits by giving them a run out in the sunshine."

"Oh, you thought they were getting prison-pallor, did you?"

"Yes, you guessed it, I was thinking of prison-pallor."

"And so contrived an excuse to send the girls on a two-mile walk across the fields?"

"Yes."

"Had prison-pallor yourself, eh?"

"Yes."

"Used to look into a pocket-mirror and thought it was a ghost?"

"Possibly."

"Never saw the blue sky except through a grating, or when walking lock-step across a stone paved courtway?"

"You have it."

"Well, look here, J.B., don't stand around here keeping me from work—I wish the Lord I could find a few more J.B.'s to help run this shebang. And, say, make a little list of the pale, nervous, yellow and scared girls and send them out by turn for clematis whenever the sun shines. Don't stand around keeping me from work, don't you think I have anything to do myself? Go on with you!"

"So the J. B. in time evolved into a right hand man, and came to know a deal more about the business than the boss."

Loose-Leaf Books as Office Time Savers

Advantages Claimed Over Bound Books—Disadvantages Enumerated in the Card Ledger—This System Constitutes a Perpetual Ledger, Says Writer—Only One Book Should be Used When Transferring From Bound to Loose-leaf Book.

By Howard R. Wellington.

It is a well recognized fact that the bound book is now a record of the past, only the very conservative houses still maintaining a record of this nature. We believe we are safe in saying that there is no place to-day where a bound book can be used which cannot be better filled by the use of a loose-leaf book of modern type. Strictly speaking, there is actually no difference between a loose-leaf and a bound book. Bind the loose sheets in a binder and lose the key—you then have a bound book. Having disposed of the key, it would be necessary to tear the sheets out in order to remove them, and this can be done with any bound book.

A loose-leaf book may be used in the same way as a bound book, and the same things may be done with it as with a bound book, but in addition, there are a hundred and one other things which may be done which it is impossible to do with the bound book.

One Objection Over-ruled.

But one objection has been raised to the loose-leaf system, especially the ledger, and that is the possibility of the sheets becoming lost or misplaced. This is quite possible, but similarly you could lose five and ten-dollar bills from your cash drawer, as we do not consider it necessary to bind these. With ordinary care it is impossible to misplace or lose a ledger sheet. The term "loose-leaf system" applies to the binding only as there is really no such thing as a loose-leaf system, but it simply means that the sheets may be removed and inserted at the will of the bookkeeper. The ledger is virtually a bound book, except to the person who has the key.

Transposing Sheets.

Probably the most important feature in a loose-leaf ledger is the advantage gained by the transposing of certain sheets, thus having at all times a ledger which is correctly divided or apportioned. For instance, in a bound book, when commencing a set of books, it is necessary to lay out a plan roughly as to the division of the ledger into such accounts as sales, purchases, impersonal accounts, etc., and very often one of these sections overlaps the other so as to mix the accounts, rendering it necessary to continue with this incorrectly-divided book or open a new ledger, the latter being an unusually heavy task, as any bookkeeper will admit. With the loose-leaf book, there never need be a transfer of records from place to place, when the space set apart is used up.

Opening a New Ledger.

Once the initial expense is made, the loose-leaf ledger will prove to be less expensive, as a bookkeeper never has to open a new ledger, simply inserting new sheets as required and filing the old sheets in the same order in a transfer binder; in other words, the ledger is perpetual.

Then again, a ledger keeper becomes familiar with the location of each account in the ledger, and a vast amount of time is saved in posting, as each account remains permanently in the same place.

Loose-leaf records should be used wherever it is desirable to preserve any information for future reference, such as prices, quotations, due dates of drafts and notes, appointments, etc. Especially for temporary uses is the loose-leaf valuable, as the records when of no further use, may be taken out and more recent information of value, inserted without affecting the book in any way.

The Binder.

There are hundreds of binders for loose sheets on the market to-day, some good, some hardly worth the name. In purchasing a binder we should be certain that it will hold the sheets in such a way as to be permanent until the key unlocks the binding device. There must be no possibility of the loss of a sheet through not being bound securely. The binder should be securely locked so that only the person in charge can operate it. This is just as important as the locking up of cash and if regarded as such, there will be no trouble with the loose-leaf ledger.

Another feature to be remembered in purchasing a binder is that the sheet, when once the binder is unlocked, shall be easily detached or inserted, as some of the devices in use are very cumbersome in this respect.

The sheets should present a perfectly flat surface when properly secured, such as the sheets of a high-grade bound book, the latter being the most expensive bound book on the market.

Changing From Bound Book to Loose-Leaf.

In making a change from a bound book system to a loose-leaf system it is well to adopt only one book at a time so as not to upset the work in any way. The change may be brought about so gradually in this way, that it will not affect the work of the office in any way, and, besides, if there is any doubt about the advantages of the loose-leaf system, it can be easily demonstrated that there are a great many points in its favor.

Use of the Carbon Sheet.

We advocate strongly the use of the carbon sheet where possible, especially in the invoice department—there are a hundred and one different ways of invoicing goods, but no record is better than a carbon copy, showing exactly what was sent the customer. The use of a typewriter even in small stores will save a vast amount of time, besides producing a much more satisfactory result.

Value of Loose-leaf Over Cards.

A loose leaf or a card must be accessible, and once a drawer containing cards is locked for the purpose of securing the cards against being misplaced, it is impossible to use the cards for reference.

It is inconvenient to read the contents of a card unless taken from the drawer—it is inconvenient even to address the names for mailing purposes; in order to make a memo or post an item it is absolutely necessary to remove card from drawer. When replacing the card it is quite easy to misplace it, causing no end of trouble, as a misplaced card is of very little use until located.

NO SALESMANSHIP THERE.

"No customer is asked by my employees to buy anything but what she asks for," is a statement attributed to George Stadtlander, a Philadelphia grocer. If the North American retail trade were to be judged by Mr. Stadtlander they would be found wanting initiative in their selling methods. Likewise it migth be said that Mr. Stadtlander's clerks must be far from finished salesmen, for if they simply hand out the goods asked for, they are no better than the combination of a handle and a notice, "Drop in ten cents and pull."

It is a business axiom that sentiment and business must not be allowed to mix, but if this were carried out in the grocery world the trade would be decried as flint-hearted scoundrels.

Circular Advertising Goes Out Monthly

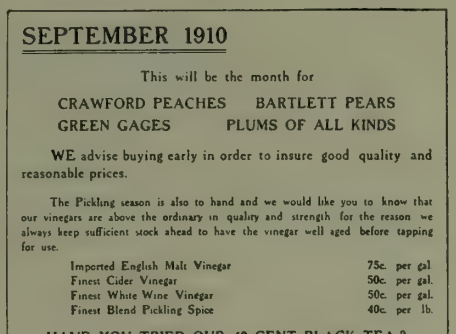
Ellis Bros., Ottawa, Suggest Goods Seasonable for Certain Months—Hints on Writing Such Circulars and How to Make Them Valuable—Advertising Should Interest Customers in New Goods and Raise the Standard of Staples—Need of the Dealer's Personality.

Any variety of retail advertising designed to attract new trade, to interest present customers in goods which cannot be classed as household necessities and to raise the standard of the goods now being purchased is usually money well spent, if the merchant goes at it in the right way.

When any merchant decides on a specific advertising campaign, whether newspaper or circular, he should look to his copy. He must make it appeal to the people who are either regular or prospective customers; he must put into it his own personality and talk to these people, as if they were standing in front of his counter; he has got to attract their interest, and he has to hold that interest until such a time that they decide to purchase the goods advertised from him.

If he can do this he is a successful advertiser, the measure of success being gauged by the number of people who purchase from him the goods he advertises.

One of the advertising methods of H. C. Ellis, of Ellis Bros, The People's Grocery, Ottawa, is the sending out with monthly accounts of small circulars, which will either fit into an ordinary envelope or which will do so when folded once. These are also sent to all their customers who do not get accounts and to a number of prospective customers who they think might be interested.



Make Monthly Announcements.

Announcements are, therefore, made every month suggesting articles to the consumer suitable to that month. This is a splendid idea and it is a fact that dealers do not make the most of it.

For instance, in their August announcement, Ellis Bros. call special attention in their circular to such goods as fancy biscuits, olives, pickles, jams, bacon and hams, preserved figs, ginger ale and marmalade. This list of goods with their brands, are named under the following introduction: "We endeavor to handle only such lines that we know are of genuine merit, and we also make a specialty of high-grade groceries, as the following will show."

A criticism that might be made of this circular is that in only one case is the price mentioned—that of a high-grade brand of tea. Again, the brands of articles named may not be as familiar to the customer as to the merchant, and since none of the qualities of any article are set forth, the effect upon the prospective buyer of these lines might not be as good as one would desire.

The "September Announcement," which is here reproduced, reduced from 6 inches wide and 7 inches long, is a good circular, because it calls attention to the peach, pear and plum season, the pickling season, and quotes prices wherever possible.

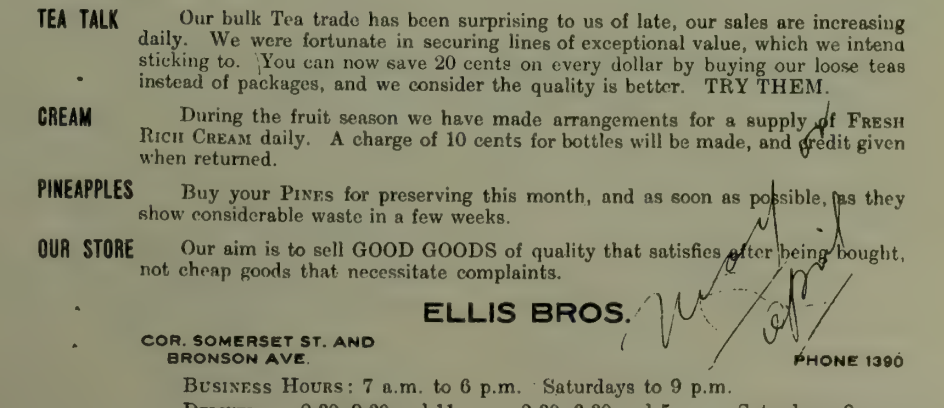
Probably it would have been better had the introduction dealt with the saving of 20 cents on an outlay of $1 in tea, as: "We save you 20 cents on one dollar, etc." This is always good policy wherever an advertisement contains such news.

Price and Quality Talks Most.



The circular card dealing with Tea Talk, Cream, Pineapples and Our Store is also a good advertisement. It was used for the May announcement. The only criticism that might be offered is the opening sentence. It is not at all likely that the general public will care a great deal whether sales have increased or not. They are more particular about quality and price, and if the introduction had begun with the third sentence, "You can now save 20 cents on every dollar, etc.," one would naturally think the prospective customer would be more interested and more likely to read the entire announcement.

The remainder of the card will be considered good advertising, because the merchant wrote the copy just about the way he would say it to a customer before him.

It is also good policy, as Ellis Bros. have done, to mention the business hours and times of deliveries. This encourages the housewife to telephone her order at the proper time or give it personally in good time to catch a delivery.

Should Create a New Demand.

As above stated, any system of advertising which attracts the attention of the public to new goods or which raises the standard of staple articles purchased, is to be commended, but the merchant who wishes to interest prospective customers to the greatest possible degree must see that his copy talks for him personally. He must make it a "silent salesman" capable of advising and suggesting the purchase of worthy goods, just as he himself would do in the store if the customer were before him. This shows the necessity of giving prices, because the customer would certainly ask him if she were making the purchase personally or by means of the telephone.

TEA TALK Our bulk Tea trade has been surprising to us of late, our sales are increasing daily. We were fortunate in securing lines of exceptional value, which we intend sticking to. You can now save 20 cents on every dollar by buying our loose teas instead of packages, and we consider the quality is better. TRY THEM.

CREAM During the fruit season we have made arrangements for a supply of FRESH RICH CREAM daily. A charge of 10 cents for bottles will be made, and credit given when returned.

PINEAPPLES Buy your PINES for preserving this month, and as soon as possible, as they show considerable waste in a few weeks.

Relation of Copy to Power of the Ad.

Why Poorly Written Advertisements Will Not Attract New Customers—Some Samples of Retail Advertising From Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, Alberta and British Columbia—Setting of Copy Needs More Attention — Suggestions Thrown Out by an Expert.

By Alfred MacDonald.

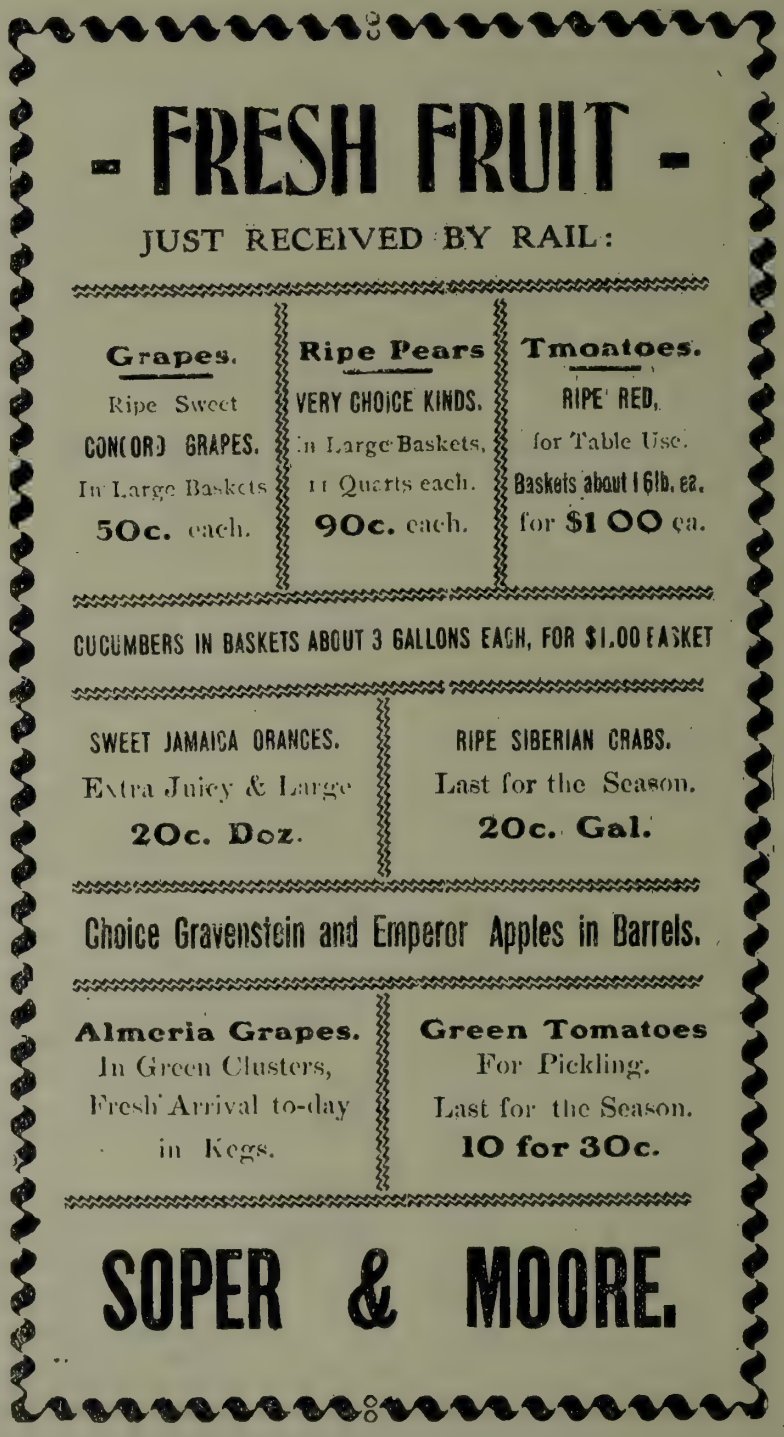
One of the greatest selling forces a dealer has at his command is white space in the daily and weekly newspapers and printer's ink. If one will look back upon the past he will find that the greatest successes in the manufacturing and retail lines of business have been those attended by big, aggressive advertising campaigns.

This bears home a lesson to the retailer who has at his finger's end, and at a little expense, newspaper space which will carry his personal talks about the quality and prices of his goods to the family fireside.

After deciding on the use of space he is next confronted with the most important feature of newspaper advertising; that is the writing of the copy. This is where the advertiser too frequently goes wrong and blames the medium for not obtaining the results expected.

Demands of a Good Ad.

There are three things about which the writer of copy must be particular. He must write copy that will first attract the attention of the reader; that will hold the attention of the reader so that he or she will read the ad., and that will be of such a character as to persuade that reader to purchase goods advertised.



If a merchant writes a newspaper advertisement which merely causes a reader to take an interest in the wording, it availeth him little. The copy must "create a demand" to be effective.

Therefore, when an advertisement runs, "Tea, Sugar and Soap at White's Corner Grocery" day in and day out, the cause of no results is self explanatory. Every grocery carries tea, sugar and soap and there is no earthly reason why a consumer will go to White's because he advertises these names. He must go further and make his ad. talk so that he actually "creates a demand" by bringing custom to his store which would otherwise not be secured.

Defective Setting.

But even after a merchant has written an advertisement that has each one of the above good qualities, the effect is often spoiled by the work of the printer who sets the copy. To illustrate this point take a look at the Soper & Moore advertisement from a St. John's, Newfoundland, paper and the Speer Bros.' ad. from Calgary, Alta.

The copy in both is pretty well written but a casual glance at the former shows a confusion of rules and type which causes a blur. This ad. might have been made much more attractive had straight line rules been used instead of the wiggly variety. In Newfoundland no doubt the heading "Fresh Fruit" would have been sufficient to attract the reader's attention. The short, crisp talks given would naturally hold attention and together with the price would bring the reader's mind to the point of deciding to purchase. Had the type, too, been more uniform the attractiveness would have been enhanced. The Gothic style might have been eliminated altogether.

A Well Written But Poorly Set Ad. From St. Johns, Newfoundland.

A Good Calgary Ad.

The Speer Bros. ad. is attractively set and the introduction can only be commended because it is sufficient to arouse interest. The fact that only quality goods are sold and that prices are quoted with the other information given ought to be sufficient to bring results. Speer Bros.' advertisement occupied space a column in length and therefore it was only possible to show a portion of it.

Type Again Criticized.

The make-up of the ad. of Share & Campbell, Halifax, N.S., might be criticized. The type is rather black and a more attractive setting could easily be effected by the use of smaller type allowing to run all the way across the space. A good feature of this copy is the prominence paid to prices. Still another is the appropriateness of it. Had some brief, pithy talks been given about the tomatoes, spices and vinegar, the interest in it would, one would naturally suppose, be more pronounced. It is usually considered to be good taste to use the same style of type in the first line or two of the introduction as in the name of the grocer or firm as Share & Campbell have done. The whole is, however, too good to criticise severely and not good enough to praise very highly.

The same might be said of the H. O. Kirkham ad. from Victoria, B.C. Whether it would have been better to have used the third line of the introduction, "If you want to eat something good, etc.," in place of "Small Purse Prices on Highest Quality Goods" is a question. Evidently Mr. Matthews of Saanich bears a reputation for growing sugar corn and in such a case the mention of his name is commendable. The prices quoted in heavy black type is also a good feature but it might have been better had there been something given to distinguish, for instance, milk fed chickens, clover valley butter, etc., from other varieties. The interest would have been greater and there would have been a greater tendency for a reader to do some purchasing.

Sales in Season Depend on Advertising

Housewives Who Rely on the Telephone Will Not be Aware of Goods in Stock Unless Told of in The Newspapers—Goods Should be Sold as Advertised—Writer Does Not Believe in Cutting Prices—Stale Ads. Discountenanced—Thinks the Man Who Knows the Goods and Profits Should Write the Avertisements.

By R. J. Donaghy.

I do not think that any branch of retail merchandising offers a more attractive number of articles to advertise than those sold over the counter in a modern grocery.

A grocer's stock comprises goods from every part of the world. and as each article has its own particular season, his sales depend entirely on how you display and advertise it. The large numbers of housekeepers who buy their groceries by telephone will seldom think of these seasonable articles unless reminded through the columns of your daily paper by an advertisement simple yet convincing is its wording.

Must Deliver as Advertised.

Quality is the cornerstone on which every successful business is constructed, but you must be honest with your customers and give them exactly as you advertise.

You cannot always trace direct results from every ad. you write but by keeping everlastingly at it week after week new business is bound to follow.

Advertising cut prices on staple groceries which some grocers imagine is the quickest road to success, is to my mind a losing proposition. A large volume of business is created but the class of customers generally attracted buy the snaps advertised and go somewhere else for their other goods.

Seasonable Advertising Upheld.

You can make your store known as the leading place to buy such articles as coffee, oysters, fancy biscuits, maple syrup, navel oranges and grape fruit. marmalade fruits, honey, prunes and apricots, figs, olives, pure vinegars and spices, dried fruits, etc.. by what I call seasonable advertising.

Every Housekeeper Prides Herself on the Goodness of Her Christmas Cake

She prefers to pay a few cents more for the best Raisins, Currants, Peels and Nuts than to take a chance buying the cheapest.

Our stores have gained an enviable reputation for selling the best goods in London, and will never sacrifice quality for price, especially in dried fruits.

Valencia Raisins (3 grades), 2, 3 and 4 pounds for 25c
Cleaned Currants (3 grades), 2, 2½ and 3 pounds for 25c
California Seeded Raisins (2 grades), per pounds pack ... ... 10c and 12½c
Sultana Raisins (2 grades), a pound ... ... 10c and 15c

BEST IMPORTED PEELS

Lemon, Orange and Mixed, a pound 20c
Citron, a pound 25c

SHELLED ALMONDS

Three sizes, a pound .... 40c, 45c and 50c
SHELLED WALNUTS, lb. .. 40c
SHELLED PECANS, lb. 90c
Best Molasses, Raw Sugar, Pure Spices.

NEW FARD DATES

We sell the best grade. They have a very small pit, and are so clean and tempting; 2 pounds for 25c
Largest Layer Figs, pound .. 20c
Choice Layer Figs, pound .. 15c
Stuffed Dates, box 30c
Turkish Delight, box 20c

Splendid Sample of a Christmas Advertisement, Written by R. J. Donaghy, Manager for T. A. Rowat & Co., London.

Select one of these articles when it has the greatest call and advertise it persistently; also make window displays of it whenever possible; if not give it a most prominent position in your store and keep this up till you are ready to start with your next specialty. I do not mean that you should advertise your specialty exclusively but give it more particular attention than anything else.

By following this plan you will be surprised at the increased sales for the articles on which you specialize and also the prestige your name will have among the better class of customers.

Single Column Preferred.

I have always preferred single columns, using from 30 to 100 lines running every other day and changing my copy every insertion. Use an attractive phrase or sentence as a headline; follow this up with an interesting talk about the article and then quote your price.

Don't let your ads. become stale by running them two or three times in succession. You may advertise the same article, but my advice is—change the headline and rearrange the wording so that it looks entirely new.

Special Week-End Sales.

To advertise a special week-end sale select a fruit such as navel oranges or pineapples when they are most plentiful.

You can often secure a special price from your wholesaler on a size he is heavily stocked with.

Fill your window and have a large card printed with an odd price on it such as:

Big Special Orange Sale to-day and Saturday Regular 40c Size
for 29c Dozen.

You can afford to make this cut on your regular price because of the large quantity you will sell, and very often a woman coming in for a dozen or two of oranges will see other things she wants and before leaving you will get a good sized grocery order.

Run a pineapple sale on the same lines and you will be surprised at the increased quantity you will dispose of.

In conclusion I would advise every grocer to write his own copy. Don't use stock ads. that you can buy by the dozen. A grocer himself knows best what lines he wants to sell, what lines pay him the best profit and he also knows best when these goods are in greatest demand.

Be original in what you say and describe your article in plain simple language.

Space Devoted to Hunters' Supplies

Suggestion for an Ad. Which Ought to Catch the Eye of the Man Preparing for a Trip to the Haunts of Wild Game—The Season Should be Taken Advantage of.

By W. F. Ralph.

As the hunting season approaches the wide awake grocer—the man who realizes the commercial possibilities of the hunting season—will commence to advertise any of his stock that has a bearing on camp life.

Suggestion counts for a lot in advertising to the hunter. While the seasoned hunter generally knows pretty much what he requires in the way of food supplies for the camp, the new man does not and will gladly act on reasonable suggestion.

The seasoned man, too, can be persuaded, through advertising, to take along food that, without suggestion, he would never have thought about at all in connection with his hunting trip.

Get the Orders Early.

It is a good plan to get the hunting fraternity to order well in advance because, by ordering early, with lots of time to pack up, they are apt to be more liberal in their orders. When supplies are ordered at the last moment the hunter is apt to cut his order down to the lowest point possible," as he has much less time to prepare for its transportation.

Most of the grocers who go right after the hunters' supply trade make use of liberal newspaper space in which good live copy is run well in advance of the season. Contemporaneously with the newspaper advertising it has been found highly profitable to put in a special hunters' window display.

On this page is shown a suggestion for a hunters' supply advertisement that retail grocers may find useful as a model in preparing their hunting season advertising.

VEGETABLE DISPLAY WINDOW.

Chatham Grocer Took Advantage of the Occasion of the Fall Fair.

Chatham, Ont., Oct. 27.—The occasion of the fall fair held here was utilized by H. Malcolmson's grocery as an opportune time for a window display of vegetables grown in Kent.

One of the front windows of the store was filled with moist earth, sloping upward from the front, the earth being covered with a bed of thick green moss. In this were large, circular spaces about a foot or more in diameter, each being filled with fine samples of home grown vegetables. The moss covered bank was also marked off at each end by a row of vegetables. Among the vegetables displayed were squash, tomatoes, onions, cauliflower, cabbages, potatoes and various roots. At the back of the window a row of celery was actually growing, while there were also stalks of sweet corn planted at the ends, as well as sage in flower.

The entire display was made up of vegetables supplied to the store in the regular order of business, and, especially on account of its timely nature, made quite a hit. The display was arranged by Geo. Kime. The store makes a specialty of fresh vegetables.

When You Go Hunting

you will need something more than a good gun. You will need an adequate supply of food that is easy to carry, easily and quickly prepared. The experience of hunters is that the following lines add greatly to the comfort and enjoyment of life in camp:

Condensed Milk

The only thing possible for tea and coffee in the camp.

We have the standard lines of guaranteed quality, per can, 15c.

Canned Meats

You will require some of these in case luck is against you. Better take along a few cans of Veal Loaf, Ham and Tongue Corned Beef and Pork and Beans.

Bacon and Cold Ham

Two lines that go well to vary with fish, venison or game birds.

Bacon, per lb., - - - 22c.
Cold Ham, per lb., - - 30c.

Meat Sauces

A piquant sauce certainly does give an added "snap" to the best of meat. We have all the most popular lines waiting for your choice.

See Our Main Street Window

TEA, COFFEE, SUGAR

Camp life is almost unthinkable without a plentiful supply of good Coffee or Tea and Sugar. After a hard day's shooting a cup of steaming tea or coffee takes away that tired feeling from body and brain. Whatever else you forget, don't forget Tea and Coffee.

Don't Forget Your Tobacco

Cheese, Cream & Canadian

Some hunters prefer the Canadian cheese and some the cream: but all hunters insist that cheese of some kind is indispensable in camp. We have both kinds, splendid quality at the lowest prices.

Fresh Eggs, Butter

Your party will require a few dozen of really fresh eggs, because after all's said and done, a breakfast of eggs and bacon cannot be beaten for tastiness and satisfaction. Makes a good basis for a hard day's tramp. And don't forget some good creamery butter.

Condensed Soups

Very handy for a quick meal, positively unbeatable as a quick refresher. Heat the can, open, mix with a little hot water and your soup is ready. We can let you have some brands that would tickle the palate of a prince.

Biscuits

Take along a few pounds of plain and fancy biscuits. Handy to have a few in your pockets when on the tramp or waiting by the trail.

Get your outfit ready in good time, thus avoiding the possibility of forgetting something important as one is so apt to do when in a great hurry. Better order NOW and let us pack your stuff ready for delivery to your starting point at a moment's notice.

A Suggestion for a Newspaper Advertisement Appropriate for the Hunting Season.—Written by The Grocer's Ad. Critic.

Good Profits From High Class Goods

The W. H. Stone Co., Winnipeg, Use Their Selling Power With Good Results—Dispose of Best Quality Goods, Give Superb Satisfaction and Obtain Better Profits—Some Instances Illustrating What Can be Accomplished by Salesmanship.

"Until the last twelve months or so we have never had a sale for a large attractive bottle of olive oil; but on the recommendation of a Toronto firm who handle an attractive line of these goods, we purchased a few packages to sell at 50 and 90 cents per bottle. and by the exercising of a little salesmanship our staff has been able to dispose of quite a quantity of this line, and we are consequently getting repeat orders and new business."

"Previous to getting this line we had never been able to sell with any success goods more expensive than 25 to 30 cents in price."

The above is one instance of the experience of The W. H. Stone Co., Winnipeg, Man., recognized to be among the West's leading grocery stores. It shows the prominence this firm attaches to the power of salesmanship in disposing of high class goods which bear good profits.

Forget About Their Profits,

No doubt there are dealers all over Canada still offering for sale the cheaper olive oil, when they might just as well sell the higher grade more extensively, and at the same time reap the better profit connected with each and every sale.

This big western firm believe that intelligence and alertness is good timber in the store. These characteristics in a salesman aid him in appreciating the wants of the customer standing before him. Any dullard can be waited on and served, but to serve requires judgment skill, tact, patience and industry. When these have become the accomplishment of the salesmen, then they can sell the goods and adequately serve the customer.

The W. H. Stone Co.'s store carries high class goods. In doing so it assumes that its patrons are familiar with the better classes of foodstuffs, and that they are particularly anxious to secure them even if the prices may be higher.

Selling High Class Groceries.

Their wisdom in that is best illustrated by the statement of A. E. White, the secretary-treasurer. "Our sales of high class groceries," he says, "have been steadily on the increase during the last four or five years, and we attribute this fact to the reason that we made it a point to talk quality to our customers in preference to price.

"We feel that there is no question as to the truth of the saying that 'quality is remembered long after the price has been forgotten.'"

Here is a point in salesmanship worthy of more than a passing consideration. This Winnipeg grocery firm find it easier to sell a quality article costing the consumer 50 and 90 cents, than a similar article at 25 and 30 cents. Not only do they sell more of the former but their percentage of profit is greater, better satisfaction is given. and there is less chance of losing a customer.

Another Splendid Result.

Mr. White cites another actual experience to prove his contention in this regard.

"The same thing applies to ox-tongue in glass jars. During the last three months we have sold several cases of this line at a retail price of $1.25, whereas lunch-tongue at 35 cents and ox-tongue in tins which retail at 85 cents per tin were our limits until we introduced the higher grade and more attractive line."

This instance of the selling power of The W. H. Stone Co. is typical of the big merchants who have attained outstanding positions in the mercantile world.

A Winnipeg manufacturer said recently that he did not believe success could be attained in any great measure in the retail grocery business to-day, unless the merchant exercised and developed his selling possibilities.

"Wait for the demand," he said, "and there will be little business done; the dealer must create demand himself if he is going to succeed. Whether this is done by the exercising of his power of speech to suggest and persuade, by newspaper advertising, window-dressing, cleanliness, quality in goods, interior and exterior appearance, or by all of these, it matters not; but the demand above the ordinary requests of customers must be secured."

This man has been through the mill, and he knows.

This strikes a key in the reasons for the progress made by The W. H. Stone Co. By urging their customers to purchase quality goods that were bound to give satisfaction, they not only kept their trade, but secured new patrons, and at the same time received better profits. It must be remembered that whatever else is done, there must be profits secured which will float the business above water. If no attention is paid to this feature, eventual failure is irresistible. A stock turn-over twice a month may be done but unless there be profits which will more than overcome expenses it availeth nothing.

It is therefore with the profit point in view that such houses as The W. H. Stone Co. do business. Any other policy they deem, would be suicidal.

Qualifications of the Clerk who Makes a Success

"How to Become a Successful Assistant," was one of the subjects written on in the prize essay contest of the London, Eng., Grocers' Exhibition. The first prize essay was contributed by S. Snowcroft and was as follows :

1. Punctuality.—Be prompt in getting to business.

2. Personality.—Give attention to your personal appearance. Clean finger nails, neat attire; cheerful countenance, and a pleasant address help success.

3. Tact.—Immediately customer enters, step briskly forward, with a "glad-to-see-you" smile. Be patient with slow customers, diplomatic with grumblers, respectful and courteous to all. Remember names and faces. Customers like to be greeted pleasantly by name—they feel flattered, appreciated.

4. Accuracy.—Cast up customers' invoices carefully. Avoid mistakes ; they are costly. When in error apologise promptly, frankly.

5. Dependability.—When you promise to procure or deliver goods by an appointed time, do it. Disappointed customers are fatal to success.

6. Knowledge.—Know the goods you handle. Be able to give full, prompt and accurate reply to the customer's question about country of origin, different grades of quality, process of manufacture, how prepared for use.

7.— Thoroughness.—Avoid "slipshodness." Never leave a customer partly served. Let your thoroughness indicate a desire to please.

8. Progressive.—Customers welcome information about new goods—whether corn cures or washing powders. Attention skilfully drawn to a new thing means a sale, wins you a reputation for up-to-dateness and leads to success.

9. Systematic.—Be methodical ; systematise your work. Master it, or it will master you. Abhor dirt. Keep stock bright, scales sparkling, counter polished. Do not write or read private notes or newspapers during business hours.

10. Morals.—Shun gossip. Be truthful ; be honest ; be manly ; be gentlemanly ; be true to yourself. Cultivate lofty ideals.

"Hitch your waggon to a star." Success will inevitably follow.

Each Clerk has a Special Article, Which he Displays and Talks up to Receptive Customers.

Article Assigned Weekly to Each Clerk

System Used by a British Columbia Dealer in Selling Profitable Goods—Clerks Keep Track of Sales Daily so That Their Worth and Salaries May be Judged—Each Salesman Looks After a Display for the Particular Article Allotted to His Attention—Found to be a Profitable Method.

"We certainly have found salesmanship one of the greatest factors in the securing of new business," said a prominent grocer of Victoria, B. C., recently, in repy to a query upon this subject.

"We have adopted many selling plans from time to time, and among them that of suggestion has been probably foremost. One idea we follow particularly is this: Beginning with any week we select some particular article for each clerk. If he does not already know its best talking points, he is told them, and he is supposed to push the article that has been allotted to him.

Selling More Cocoa.

"That is the method in the rough, but it works out on a broader and more elastic principle. For instance, suppose that one clerk has been given a line of cocoa, as this is particularly apropriate at this season, and illustrates the point.

"Women like cocoa, and it has a big sale, but with many it may almost be regarded as a delicacy. They are probably overlooking it until their attention is called to it, and only a little talk is needed in many cases to make a sale.

A Display for Each Clerk.

"Well, this clerk, using his best judgment, makes a special effort to sell this line of cocoa, which, of course, must give a fair profit. To assist him in the work he will have a neat display on part of the counter at which he is generally found, or it may be on a showcase or shelf.

"The idea is that it may attract the customer, even before the clerk has spoken, or having it close to hand he has but to point to it in suggesting it to customers from whom he is taking orders.

"He has to depend largely on his judgment to decide what customers he will suggest it to, for like every other plan, this one is not guaranteed to suit every case. It has, however, proved invaluable in our store and the clerks themselves like the idea.

"They have to keep account of the number of sales of the article entrusted to them, and in this way, together with the duplicate order-checks, we are able to follow the success of the efforts that have been put forth by each. To a certain extent their abilities may be judged from this plan, likewise their interest in the work, and their salaries as well.

Goods Sold Over the Phone, Too.

"Those who are sent out to take orders follow a similar principle, and in answering the telephone it receives the same prominence. Of course, this method does not exclude suggesting other articles. Not at all! The clerk pursues his usual plan, but emphasizes the special article allotted to him for that particular week.

"It is not difficult to keep different articles going the rounds. They are interchanged among the clerks in order to give these special articles as big an impetus as possible. By thus talking up goods that are not asked for every day, goods that from their character may be called delicacies for even the average consumer, a new trade is slowly but surely built up.

Quality and Profit Important.

"It has been our opinion that this policy is good business from every way you look at it. If you get in a new line of pickles, jams or jellies, which presents a good profit, and the quality of which can be depended upon, it is not safe to wait until the customers ask for it. In fact, such a method seems suicidal.

"Our policy is to go after the business and, to gather it in, you must undertake a selling plan—or it might be called an educating plan—by which the new goods are introduced to customers. If the article is worthy of our efforts—and we always endeavor to satisfy ourselves on that point before we handle it at all—then we do not hesitate in telling customers that we have faith in it, that it is good goods and will give satisfaction.

Are From Missouri.

"No matter how good an article may be, most people do not know it when you first present it to them. They have to form their own opinions by experience. If we were to get in new stock and simply leave it in the store-room, or if we even displayed it on the shelves and then trusted to fortune, we would soon have more old stock in the place than we would know what to do with, and we would not be getting our money back.

"Our experience has assured us of the importance of this principle in the grocery business, and we think that every grocer can profit by adopting it," he said in conclusion.

Plain Talks About Grocers' Defects

Observant Knight of the Grip Takes a Fall Out of The Man Who Knows It All—This is the Class, He Declares, Who Frequently Drops Into the Hands of The Receiver—Gives Some Actual Conversations With Men Behind the Counter.

Said a traveller recently:—"There is one class of grocer who never will amount to a row of pebbles, and that is the man who knows nothing or practically nothing about the business and will not admit it. I fail to see any hope for that individual. His days are numbered, and it is only a matter of time until he notifies his creditors that he has given up the struggle. The receiver takes charge of the obsequies; the last rites are performed; the mourners get twenty-five cents on the dollar; the old stock is sold at ridiculously low prices; the other grocers rant and rave until the cheap goods disappear, and there is another vacant store on the main street.

Like Tennyson's Brook.

"It is we travelers that know this kind. You cannot do business with them, and you cannot tell them anything, for they think they know it all themselves. They come and go on forever, with wonderful regularity. One fails, and there is another to take his place. On our first trip we find the new one confident of what he is going to do, but ignorant of what he is doing. And he is there every time we come around, but looking sourer each time. However, he is very busy, so he says. Has no time to talk to travelers, no time to read in fact. Call some other day. Another day comes, but Mr. Man has gone.

"Yes, if some of these fellows would admit to themselves that they knew as much about the grocery store as they do about hte fourth dimension there might be some salvation. At least, they would be in a position to learn some of the rudimentary principles of how to make money handling groceries. But you simply cannot tell the majority of them anything.

"They know this and they know that, to hear them tell it, but if you get any opportunity to unmask them, you will soon find that they are ignorant of even the basic principles.

Neglected to Study.

"I told one of them a few things, not long ago, that may wake him up, but I have my doubts. I did not want to be too personal about his business, but we were talking on business methods, and how to get new ideas and how to develop old ones. I felt that his ideas were few and far between, although if he once got going he might be able to grasp a few notions. So inadvertently I asked him if he read a trade paper dealing with his business. Oh, yes, he read it sometimes, but he could not find much to it.

"That's queer," I told him, "I know grocers who say they find it quite a benefit. I'll bet that if you were to read it carefully, and act upon the methods given, that you would find quite a difference.

Article on Profits and Cost.

"There happened to be a recent copy on a side shelf, so I opened it and called his attention to an article by Henry Johnson. Now, I know about Johnson pretty well myself, and I know that he has made good as a retailer, so I said, Here is an article that is meant just for grocers like you.

" 'How's that' he asked, but he really did not seem to want the answer. However, I was just waiting for that cue, so I said: 'Well, seeing you've asked me, I'll tell you, and I mean it for your best interests; you know you do not understand the grocery business. This article deals with profit and costs. Now do you know what it costs you to sell your goods?'

"I guess he did not know whether to answer me or to throw me out, but I told him how important it was that he should get things down to a business level before he could hope to secure the best results. He repiel that his cost of doing business was not a big item, and then I started.

Some Plain Talk.

" 'You are not the only one who is struggling along with the same idea, and when I speak plain like this I don't want you to feel offended.'

"So we went around the store, and I pointed out where he could improve arrangements of goods, told him about his windows, etc. I referred to salesmanship, cost accounting, quality, and told him to learn how others do things.

" 'Ask travelers,' I told him, 'it is better to learn all they know than to send them about their business without even an enquiry. Learn from other grocers if you can, and when you read your trade paper, start at it as if there was something you could learn, and not as if you knew it all and did not need assistance.'

"I cannot say that I told him much myself, but I did point out a few defects that could be removed, and a better system established.

Must Acknowledge Defects.

"As I have already said, this is the kind of grocer who must grasp the first principles of business or close up his shop. He must be converted, so to speak, and before that takes place he must admit his deficiencies.

"I have often wondered if anything can be done for the grocers of this class and each time I get back to the above conclusion that they must acknowledge that they have something to learn. In other words they must co-operate. This co-operation may be with a local association, with a traveler, with the trade journal or with any other means that can direct him along the right path or all."

Power of Quality Backed by Cleanliness

An Illustration From Quebec Province—Greater Enthusiasm Can be Placed Behind Selling Power if Such is the Case—Modern Fixtures and Prompt Service Add to Possibilities—An Annual Turnover of $50,000 on a $5,000 Stock—A Large Business Owned by Women.

The first, and the most striking feature of the store of J. N. Duquette, Park Avenue and Prince Arthur St., Montreal, to the incoming customer, is the atmosphere of perfect cleanliness pervading the entire place. Naturally the first question asked is, how they manage to keep it in the condition it is always found? In order to answer this the manager, J. C. Marchand, gave a short outline of the history of the business from the first time, eight years ago, when J. B. Berthiaume began retailing groceries.

As one of his first investments he decided that his fixtures must be of the best, and such that the stock would be as nearly free from outside contamination as was possible. With this in view the quality of the fixtures, show cases, etc., was such that the appearance of the store necessitated constant care to keep it always up to the mark. Gradually this careful spirit spread throughout the employes of the establishment, until it became a matter of pride to see that nothing should mar the original state of things any more than was unavoidable.

Six years later the store passed into the hands of Duquette & Falcon. The head of the firm, Mr. Duquette, carried even further the policy of cleanliness and neatness, rendered perhaps more easy by the thorough training given the employes by the first proprietor.

Women as Grocers.

Some few months ago both members of the firm died, leaving Mrs. Duquette and her daughter, Miss Florence, with the store on their hands.

Instead of selling out as most women placed in similar circumstances would have done, they immediately started in to run the business, with the valuable assistance of the right hand man of the old firm, J. C. Marchand. Florence, the daughter, pluckily left high school to take charge of the office work, and aided by the advice of the older employes, she had soon mastered the situation, and was running the business like a veteran. The old lines have been followed to the letter, with additional improvements as they became obvious and necessary.

Carry Only Quality Goods.

Two of the maxims of the store are well worthy of being placed over the desks of every up-to-date retailer. The first is "Never stock anything you would not wish to eat yourself." The second is that "It is better to sweep out the corners of your store first, and the centre afterward. Then you can be sure it is thoroughly done."

These sound like very simple things, but the constant application of them to the everyday store routine is bound to have the best kind of an effect on the general tone of the store.

When questioned recently by The Grocer as to the effect on the average customer, Miss Duquette said the best recommendation to this kind of merchandising showed in two ways—first, the class of customers to trade there were of the very best, and second, that they were much more ready to pay cash if it was necessary to do so in order to trade there.

Weekly Trade of $1,000.

Speaking more in detail as to this latter result, she said that, in their average weekly business of nearly $1,000, only about ten per cent. was not a strictly cash business, and the balance was in short time accounts.

According to Mr. Marchand the goods are already half sold when they make their appearance in the store. The reasons for this he considered to be two. One has already been referred to, the goods and their appearance. The other is by far the more important. To give the proper explanation one must dip into psychology a little.

Selling Power of the Individual.

Clerks are human, the same as the rest of mankind. Suppose you are stocking poor stuff, badly put up, and carelessly looked after. Naturally the salesman can feel little enthusiasm when recommending to a customer. Which will he sell the most of? Goods he knows are not what the customer should have, or those which he is firmly convinced are as good as can be sold for the money? This personal element in the selling of groceries is only too often entirely neglected. How can a man conscientiously recommend articles he has no intention or wish to use for himself? and if he cannot do this conscientiously how much influence will he have on the prospective customer?

Just let us take an example. A customer asks for some eggs, requiring that they be absolutely new laids. If the clerk is confident that his eggs are what is required, will not his decisive, confident manner assure the customer that they are as represented, and effect the sale? Suppose, on the other hand, that he knows the customer will be certain to find some of the eggs poor, is his line of selling talk going to be as convincing?

Of course not, and therein lies the secret of the success of this business. Every clerk in the store is absolutely certain that no better goods at the price can be furnished, at any rate not in the vicinity. Result,—the clerks are enthusiastic about the goods and produce a line of talk that makes sales. The personality and initiative of the salesman accounts for a large proportion of satisfied customers. If a customer sees that the salesman believes entirely what he says, is thoroughly in earnest, and knows that the store is willing and able to back him in his statements, it goes a long way toward effecting the disposal of the goods. Also it makes a steady customer, provided nothing occurs to change matters.

Interior Arrangement.

Accompanying this article is an illustration, showing somewhat of the interior arrangement. Undoubtedly no store is perfect in every respect, but in the Duquette premises all the essentials are to be seen. Being 100 by 30 ft., there is plenty of room to show practically all the stock capable of display. This is done by means of two series of side show cases, between which is a third, wide aisles separating all three.

Particular Goods Under Glass.

The side walls are bountifully equipped with shelf and bin fixtures of the most approved types. The displays made thereon are well in accordance with the care and thought evident in the entire conduct of the business. They are systematically placed, all goods such as teas, soaps and spices, being under glass, while articles like canned goods, not so affected by outer influences, dust, flies, etc., occupy the open shelves.

Cheese, meats and butter are kept in the refrigerators, except what is used up during each day. This trade has become so steady that now the day's supply of bacon is cut in the morning on the slicer recently installed, and it is invariably judged within ½-lb. of the correct amount. Wrapped up in pounds and halves it is kept on sanitary graniteware pans under a glass cover. The cheese is kept in a similar way. In cutting cheese, Mr. Marchand uses the method of slicing by means of a wire. He claims it is sanitary and simple. Also there is absolutely no waste.

Pump for Kerosene.

A mechanical contrivance which has proved a great convenience, is a pump for kerosene. A slight turning of a handle serves to set a stream running and the amount necessary can be gauged to a nicety. The pump has already paid for itself many times over, not only from economy in service, but in the time saved by the clerk. Also it prevents the hands from being contaminated, odors which in some stores are transferred to bread and other sensitive articles for the table.

Another mechanical assistant is a coffee mill run by electricity. Simply by turning the switch any desired amount can be ground.

Carefulness in Lighting.

The lighting of the store is very complete. Three large plate glass windows form the front outer section of the store. Two more are placed at the back. In addition there are two large gas-burners and two chandeliers suspended from the ceiling at intervals.

The ceiling itself is a credit to the store. It is of handsomely panelled wood, stained a dark brown.

Leaving for a moment the inside of the store, two delivery wagons and horses are employed and it may soon be necessary to use more. Two phones are kept busy all day long and pressure of business will soon make an additional one necessary. Most of the deliveries are made on the c.o.d. system. As Miss Duquette put it, "we have the kind of stock people want ; we have the most up-to-date methods of storing and delivering, and we find that people are fully as willing to pay cash if they receive the proper treatment."

Turnover Ten Times the Stock.

Evidently she is right for, with a stock of less than $5,000 the annual turnover is about $50,000, showing practically a monthly turnover—about as near an ideal retail grocery trade as could be found.

Casting Discredit on Honesty of the Grocer

Canadian Newspapers Take Up the Cry of Dishonesty From New York on the Part of the Retailer, Forgetting That Dealers of Our Own Country are Different — The Canadian Dealer Places the Confidence of His Customers Above Everything Else—Printing of "Don'ts" Here Likely to Cause Unjustified Criticisms.

By Harry Hallman.

A number of Canadian daily newspapers have recently published a list of "don'ts" collected by C. J. Driscoll, the Inspector of Weights and Measures of New York City, and it is likely that many other papers throughout the country will use them. A few of these "don'ts" are as follows:

Don't allow your grocer to weigh in the wooden butter dish when he is weighing your butter.

Don't gossip with your merchant while he is weighing your purchases unless you are absolutely sure of his honesty. This is one of the practices of a dishonest shop.

Don't be afraid of your tradesman. If you believe he is giving short weight, or not the proper quality of goods, do not hesitate to insist upon your rights.

The whole list is in the same tenor, tending to cast discredit upon the honesty and integrity of the grocer. Pamphlets were printed and distributed throughout New York city. Their appearance in the Canadian press, however, will not tend to disturb the great bulk of Canadian grocers.

Confidence His Best Asset

The typical grocer of the Dominion realizes that his greatest asset is the confidence of the consumers with whom he is doing business. If he did not possess their complete trust he would soon find himself ready to give up the ghost. Even if there is any doubt as to his uprightness, the mutual understanding which forms the basis of ideal salesmanship is destroyed, and were such a grocer to suggest some goods to a purchaser, his statements would be taken with a "grain of salt."

This immense asset upon which the selling power of the dealer is established is cherished by the best of Canadian retail grocers. Bereft of the confidence of their customers they might just as well turn their goods over to the receiver, first as last.

The Criminally Disposed.

There are possibly some of those who pass as grocers, to whom the above "don'ts" might well apply, but fortunately they are few and far between. Even grocers are human, and therefore are liable to err, but those who are criminally disposed, those who would stoop to cheating, fail to realize the enormity of their offence. If they continue in the path they thus choose, and having once stolen they will likely persevere in it, the winding up of their business approaches with each succeeding day. It is only a matter of time until customers begin to doubt, and this stage marks the beginning of the end.

Canadian grocers, generally speaking, have inherited an unsullied name, and up to the present they have preserved its brightness. True, there are some that may be playing with the fire, to use a colloquial expression, and they may be putting it over their customers now and then, but it is believed that this kind of grocer is a rare species.

Does Not Apply Here.

The New York inspector may have considered it necessary to cast wholesale aspersions at the retail grocery trade, but his advice might have remained below the border. The cap will fit but few grocers on the northern side of the line.

It may cause some inconvenience if some of the suspicious individuals read that list of dont's.

There are people whose trust in humanity is extremely limited, and if but a hint were dropped against the grocer they might possibly believe it.

No! the time has not yet arrived when the consuming public should be warned against their grocers, and it is to be hoped that this reputation will always be maintained.

As manufacturers who have had business with the retailer of Canada know, the Canadian dealer is a superior business man to his confrere to the south of the boundary. He is a man capable of conducting business on business principles, capable of creating demand for worthy goods. The Canadian dealer is not merely an automaton.

By a recent ruling of a judge in Springfield, O., grocers may keep open on Sunday. The court would not discriminate between cigarmen, ice cream dealers or any other merchants and said that if it was lawful for one it was lawful for the other.

Damaging Criticism of Dirty Stores

Women Tell Each Other at a Social Function About Grocery Stores Which Show Lack of Cleanliness—Names of Retail Dealers are Unhesitatingly Mentioned—Instance of a Loss in the Sale of Cheese.

How many grocers' ears must tingle every time there is a five o'clock tea or a quilting bee! If they only knew the criticisms, probably exaggerated, but all the more damaging, that are piled up against them wherever two or three members of the feminine sex are gathered together, they would perhaps be more particular about their interior displays, the cleanliness of their goods and the general tidiness of the whole store.

If they recognized to the full the selling force that a nice, bright, well-arranged interior presents they undoubtedly would take more pains in their attempts to create a favorable impression on the particular customer.

As it isn't probable that grocers attend these five o'clock teas or other luncheons where women predominate, we shall endeavor to give some actual observations by some of the latter, made at a certain social event of the type mentioned. They may help to illustrate the importance that the disappearance of slovenly manners is to the selling power of the business of the dealer who doles out the necessaries and luxuries of life in the foodstuff line.

Honor Where Honor is Due.

"Did you see B———'s windows yesterday," asked one, "they were simply beautiful; one of them contained all kinds of fish, another had poultry and wild game and the third one groceries; and their store looks so nice and clean."

"I wish we had a store something like that nearer us," remarked one of the other women; "if we want anything in a hurry we have to run out to the corner and you know we can't depend on the goods we get. They handle a lot of fruit and if we happen to appear just when a new lot arrives we can generally get good quality at fair prices.

Wouldn't Buy the Cheese.

"But the other day I took a notion that I would like some cheese for supper so ran over to the corner store for it. Well I saw a piece of cheese on the edge of the counter with flies around it, a sticky fly paper next it and cinnamon lying on the top of it, so you may be sure I didn't buy any. It almost sickened me. Almost every time I go there now I see something that I don't like and apart from fruit and an occasional package of spice I purchase very little.

"In fact there isn't a single clean store around here that I can depend upon. There are Jones', Brown's, Smith's and Hall's and not one of them as clean as it ought to be."

The third "spokesman" was a young woman who had not yet entered in upon the life of connubial bliss.

Another Cheese Story.

"I went into W———'s grocery on our corner there on Saturday night to get some cheese and crackers. Everything looked to be upside down and I was almost tempted to go out without them when I saw some crackers done up in five cent packages. But the cheese! A saleslady showed me a ragged little piece on the counter with no cover on it and next a pound of butter. I asked if that was all she had and she wanted to know if I wanted more. I told her I didn't want as much, but that I didn't like the looks of it. So she showed me some in a box at the back of the store which looked a little better; but I'm always afraid to get anything there."

Goods Piled Everyway.

Still another retailer came in for criticism for having so many boxes, barrels, etc., on the floor. "I can scarcely get past them," said the critic, "and the window is always so full of boxes, too, that I can never see inside without going in."

These few little conversations go to illustrate the damage that can be done to a grocer who does not keep a clean store and who expects to deal with women who are particular. It is one of the surest methods of losing trade and ought to be given the most serious consideration.

The yield of honey in the Old Country this year is about 50 per cent. of the average and bee-keepers are keenly disappointed. The scarcity is ascribed to the sunlessness of the summer, which has kept the bees from working and also to the lack of warmth and the abundance of rain which have militated against the secretion of nectar in the flowers.

Advises Hard Work to Enlarge Profits

Methods Pointed Out to Show How Greater Interest Can be Aroused Among Consumers on the High-Class Profitable Lines —These Should be Concentrated on and Unprofitable Lines Forgotten — Importance of Knowing Cost and Overhead Charges.

By Henry Johnson, Jr.

Various Things.

COST.—There are few things as elusive as cost. What you pay for your goods looks like a matter easily to be determined; yet, when you come to look into it closely, it is not so easy.

This has been discovered by manufacturers, but only very lately in its completeness. The country had expanded so rapidly, development along all lines had been so ready and impetuous, that until within a few years it was safe to do business largely on guesswork. The manufacturer made prices without any distinct idea of the cost of his goods and, so long as he made an annual profit, he did not dig into details. But things changed. Goods were made by manufacturers situated nearer to one another and competition became close. Occasionally one was unable to stand the pressure and went under; and attributed his failure to "conditions," more or less vague. Investigation showed, however, that many fixed charges had not been properly apportioned, so that even the man who survived got through only by chance, because he had some goods which paid well enough to cover the losses on the items with which he had underbid the man who failed.

Heavy Overhead Charges.

An accurate accounting showed that the fixed charges, called the "overhead," constituted such a heavy charge against the business, that, in most factories, a flat rate of 100, 125, and even 180 per cent. was added to factory cost on all goods, to cover the overhead. So it is that wholesale grocers who manufacture specialties, add a heavy percentage to what it costs them to simply compound and pack those specialties.

I know of one making a gelatine specialty. The cost of the goods, packed and ready to deliver to the sales department, is 37½ cents a dozen. But they add 100 per cent. to that cost; and the merchandising end is charged 75 cents a dozen for that gelatine.

Studying the True Cost.

If we do not reflect that nothing happens without cause, we are apt to jump at the conclusion that such a wholesaler is a "robber." A little knowledge of true conditions, and such reflection as it is well for us to cultivate, will lead us to conclude that maybe the jobber is not wrong and that we would better follow in his footsteps and find out something about our own overhead charges.

Let us begin by making sure that what we call our cost includes every charge of whatsoever nature which is incurred in getting the goods into our stores ready to sell. That will make an excellent beginning in our study of true cost.

FEAR.—Fra Elbertus says that "there is no devil but fear," and I think he is right.

We always fear to take the bull by the horns lest we encounter some strange monster in the shape of "customer-disapproval," or "what the man down the street will do." We are afraid of shadows whenever we think of reasoning things out logically, as they are, and acting on our conclusions.

If by any chance it is pointed out to us that things cost thus and so and we must figure on that cost to ascertain what our margin is and what it should be, we drop back on the reflection that this would be all very well "if they would all do it, but, etc., etc." Yet, in almost all these things, we hold our future in our own hands. Let us go about things honestly, that we do not fool ourselves, and logically, that we may KNOW the true facts and conditions.

Pay No Attention to Others.

The first thing to do is to find out just what goods cost. We are not concerned, for the present, with what others may pay, or how they may figure things, or whether they are working along right lines, or doing what they should do, or making money, or going broke. We have to do with ourselves first. Our study, then shall be our own costs—just what they amount to, to the uttermost fraction on each item.

THE GROCER'S POWER.—What we might do if we were all enlightened merchants cannot be properly computed. We could go anywhere; do anything; nullify any adverse condition. The grocery trade, as a body, has no conception of its power. I am conceding all this as a starter, to get rid of the weak objection that certain things cannot be done by one man alone; for I know that the fact that each must stand alone and work out his own problems under existing conditions, holds many advantages for those who know opportunities when opportunities come along. First, the battle makes the strong man. Second, the constant study and application make the broad, unusual merchant. Third, there is no danger of our being weakened by having too great discretionary power. That last is important; it will mean a lot to you if you will think it over and digest it.

Work Where Profits Exist.

But right now, under existing handicaps—or stimulus, if you please—the thoughtful, studious grocer, who logically thinks out his own problems, can work out his salvation with signal success. First get YOUR costs. Then work on those things on which it pays you to work. Then labor to widen your margins on your entire line. And, finally, work early and late, through improved service and the study of new and better items, to RAISE THE GRADE of your business.

With the exact knowledge of what things cost, you can immediately and without further parley, change the arrangement of your stock and alter instructions to your clerks so as to push the sale of lines which PAY.

Display Profitable Lines.

I need not go into many details—one or two will indicate what I mean. Put your sugar, corn meal, cereals without profit, and standard peas on the back shelves, where they can be got at rapidly in filling orders, so as to cut the work on them, and remove them from display. Get your coffees, teas, fine layer figs, attractive fresh fruits, fancy crackers, fancy peas, large sizes of prunes and other finer things out in front where they will to a certain extent "sell themselves," and where they will constantly remind your clerks to sell them.

That is the great preliminary step; and you will observe that there is nothing revolutionary nor trade-startling about it. Still it will likely stir up a good deal of favorable comment among your customers from the first day.

One important thing I forgot: have your windows CLEANED and arrange some simple, attractive displays in them, which change twice each week—no less.

After that—well, the rest will almost unfold itself to you after that!

The raisin crop in California is estimated at 50,000 tons against 75,000 tons last year; the Spanish crop at 15,000 tons against 30,000 tons last year and Smyrna Sultanas at 25,000 tons against 50,000 tons last year and the Greek currant crop at 120,000 tons against 185,000 last year.

High Class Goods Attractively Shown

Handsome Interior of Star Provision Company's Grocery at Regina—Importance Placed on Cleanliness and Neat Displays —Profits on Fine Goods—Modern Fixtures Installed.

That the west demands the best, is well illustrated by the handsome store of The Star Provision Company, Regina, Sask. It shows the value this firm places on interior appearance in enhancing their selling power, and provides food for thought for many easterners who are behind the times in this important feature of the grocery store.

—grocery, provision and confectionery—and each of them is equipped with up-to-date fixtures.

The business was begun in November, 1906, by W. Wakefield, formerly of St. Thomas, Ont., and A. F. Carruthers, a former resident of Strathroy, Ont. In December, 1907, they moved into their present quarters, and, principally on account of using up-to-date methods of display and personal salesmanship, they have met with good success.

They inaugurated later a cash system of business. Six weeks before doing so, they sent notices to all their customers, telling them of the contemplated change of policy. This was backed up by a vigorous advertising campaign along quality and price lines.

The Star Provision Co. make a feature of high-class goods. They secure good profits on these and talk them up to customers, thereby creating a revenue which would otherwise go to a competitor. This, they claim, aids in giving their store a certain distinctive characteristic, which is a power in getting new customers and working up new demand.

The Star Provision Co.'s store contains modern equipments equal to the best in eastern Canadian grocery establishments. The illustration shows that cleanliness and system are particularly attended to. The long shelf display and the handsome counters, at once give a distinction that appeals to the eye of every one who enters the store. This company has three separate departments

INTO THE ENEMY'S CAMP.

Kamloops, B.C., Oct. 27.—By running an advertisement in the Kamloops press The Savonas Grocery Company, Savonas, B.C., some 27 miles from here, arrests the attention of land seekers, prospectors and sportsmen. The ad. asks these people why they do not outfit at Savonas and save packing to that point. They add: "We have the goods; we understand the business and our prices are right."

This is an evidence of live merchandising and shows that this company possesses an aggressive spirit.

Delivery Route is Marked by City Map

The System in Vogue by Montreal Dealer Whose Deliverymen Make the Shortest Possible Trips—What to Do With the "Rush" Orders—Connection Between Satisfactory Deliveries and the Obtaining of New Customers.

By H. D. McMullen.

Prompt delivery and its selling power is a problem to which is given considerable prominence by Montreal dealers.

The retail grocery business they claim is one of almost infinite detail. A constant flow of small, medium sized and large packages go to make up each day's quota for the delivery department.

They go in many directions and to long, short or medium distances from the store. The customers receiving them may be in a hurry or not, may be chronically impatient and hard to satisfy, or they may be willing to be satisfied with any kind of a delivery.

In order to conduct this branch—one of the most highly esteemed methods of holding custom—in the best possible manner, and at the least expense, it has received many hours of thought from every successful, and many of his less fortunate brother grocers.

The problem has several sides. In the first place take the city retailer. While the bulk of his trade will undoubtedly lie near his store, there are sure to be at least some customers at greater distances. Usually these latter are widely scattered. To come from a distance for such everyday necessities as groceries may apparently be unnatural but it shows usually that for some particular reason the local man has "fallen down," and dissatisfied customers then spread out among other grocers at a distance.

Various Cases Which Arise.

Now to reach economically and quickly all these people requires the most careful kind of planning. The number of delivery wagons must be estimated, figuring approximately what one can do and then buying others as needed. Then, a system should be considered to handle "rush" orders. Lastly, and not by any means the least in importance, the dealer should spend the time necessary to map out the routes for his drivers which will save the most time.

Route Market on Map.

A suggestion just here as to how this may be done, and what is more, done daily :

One Montreal retailer personally supervises his delivery system and yet spends only a few minutes per day in doing so. He has a blank city map on which he has located his regular customers. Each morning and evening when his drivers are to start out a clerk brings him the list of addresses. By numbering them in the order of delivery, using the map to figure it out, the driver has an easy task. No chance of leaving addresses till the last which would mean long, unnecessary jumps.

The scheme is so simple and practical that it is rather a wonder more are not employing it.

Another merchant uses a similar method, planning for the driver, but does not use the map, saying he knew the localities so well it was unnecessary. Of course in the smaller cities this would be very true, particularly where a man had grown up in the town. In larger centres, however, the map is a practical help to a busy man.

Clamor for Rush Orders.

Let us suppose that the grocer has found out just how many wagons he needs for his regular delivery, and take up the subject of "rush" orders.

There are some customers who apparently are never satisfied to have goods delivered in the regular routine way. They must always be "rushed."

It does not take long for a grocer to know this class, and when he does there should be a little tactful explanation that continual orders given in this way are impossible to deliver. Of course that would depend to some extent on how good a customer is under consideration ; but nevertheless there is no necessity for being imposed upon. Continual punctuality at regular delivery periods will soon make any reasonable person an appreciative buyer.

The real rush order, the one which would be an absolute convenience, sometimes even a necessity, to the customer, is a different matter. These must be attended to. How to do it is often a serious problem. The regular wagons can of course take a small part of them, but the bulk will have to be looked after in some other way.

A boy is naturally the easiest solution, and one of the best. Not only can he make himself useful in this respect, but in his spare moments he can be of material assistance in the store, cleaning up and straightening stock, running errands and the hundred and one little extras that would unnecessarily otherwise take up the time of higher paid men.

If trade warrants it two boys are even better. Thus one is almost always ready if necessary. In connection with boy service bicycles are often of great benefit. They will soon pay for themselves in time saved, that is, if the boy is not inclined to loaf.

Just here it is worth while noting that in England a tricycle arrangement is used which consists of a large box on three wheels, with a seat at the back occupied by the boy. By means of pedals he can deliver very quickly, particularly in crowded streets where a wagon would be unable to make good time.

Selling Power of Good Delivery.

So far we have dealt mostly with proper delivery. But, supposing the delivery system to be running smoothly and swiftly, what is the effect ? Customers come to depend on it ; they bank on getting things when promised, and what is more, tell their friends about it. Comparing notes about household matters nearly always brings up the subject of service in its various forms, and among the first to be discussed is the grocer.

For instance let us take three close friends, Mrs. A., Mrs. B. and Mrs. C.—all three having different grocers. In the course of conversation it develops that Mrs. A. is enthusiastic about her grocer, Mrs. B. somewhat lukewarm about hers and Mrs. C. dissatisfied. Mrs. C. decides to change. Puzzle—who does she try? The answer is obvious. Eventually if she is satisfied, Mrs. B. will also change. Customers form an endless chain, the influences spreading by the most unexpected conductors. You can never tell what sends your next new customer. See that it isn't your competitor who takes away a customer of yours through unsatisfactory delivery. It is, properly handled, one of the greatest and surest methods of holding customers.

Clerks Who are Valuable and Otherwise

Some Think They are Worth More Money When They are Not —Instances Quoted Where Customers Have Been Driven Away —This Means a Big Annual Loss — The Ideal Salesman and Some of His Characteristics.

The clerk occupies a peculiar position in the grocery store. He is supposed to take as much interest in the business as if it were his own, and the reward for this close attention and care is often a wage that most factory workers would scorn.

As the selling end of the retail business is more and more regarded as the most important, the responsibility devolving upon the clerk increases proportionally in as much as he is a part of the selling force. Discredit has fallen upon the long honored motto of "buy right." It is certainly good advice but it has been emphasized to such an extent that there was a danger of entirely overlooking the selling end.

Throws His Chances Away.

It is regrettable that frequently when a grocer does buy right, he cuts his selling price because of some advantage he may have over a neighbor and instead of making additional profit he has recklessly thrown it away to his customers.

Instances of this kind have been legion, but the trade has awakened to the fact that more attention must be given the selling end of the business.

Everybody knows of some grocer who "bought right" on some line and then cut the price. Needless to say, his trade does increase for the time being, but when he can no longer offer this line at the reduced figure without a straight loss or at any rate no profit, those who have been buying from him think it strange that he should go back to the price at which other grocers were retailing.

Leading grocers recognize the value of salesmanship and much of the clerk's merit depends upon his ability in this direction. It is necessary, therefore, that he should possess a considerable amount of what is commonly called brains. Otherwise he will never be a success as a salesman. Prominent grocers who have by their own efforts risen from the ranks, freely declare that wisdom, tact, foresight, ability to read character were largely responsible for the results they attained. They also look for similar business virtues in their clerks. And it must be said that there are many clerks, unsung salesmen, who if they had the chance would make their mark as proprietors, but who are as yet only clerks.

Salary Question Important.

The salary question is one of the vexing problems in the grocery business, particularly because many other paths offer better wages and shorter hours. Proprietors would no doubt give better wages but for the reason that they are only making a living themselves. The cut-throat character of the retail business in many places is responsible for small profits and if this kind of competition keeps the profits at a low figure the clerk suffers with the proprietor.

But apart from any reason for low wages to clerks, there are quite a number who are not worthy of their hire. Possibly they were never intended for clerks but at any rate they are clamoring for "more money" when it would be better for the proprietor if he would entirely dispense with their services.

Clerk Loses Good Customer.

One clerk is known who gave the little boy of a good customer inferior butter and when she returned to the store and spoke to him about it he took it upon himself to argue with her about that and other little instances of the same kind. The woman became vexed, refused to take any butter, and left the store. She has not returned yet. This woman was a regular "pay," and her bill averaged about six dollars a week. The clerk did not realize that this meant a turnover of $312 a year to the proprietor, and supposing the net profit to be ten per cent. it meant a direct loss of thirty dollars to the grocer.

Other instances are not necessary. Every grocer and clerk who has had any experience knows of clerks who have been responsible for such losses. But the proprietors do not always learn of prospective customers—those who were buying little odds and ends now and then—but who left because a clerk divided attention between the customer and some baseball comrade and was more interested in the conversation with the latter than with the business he was supposed to be transacting.

Cases of this kind mean actual losses in dollars and cents to the grocer and in addition there are the negative losses, such as failing to make use of real salesmanship abilities.

Proprietor Often Responsible.

A clerk's value depends often upon the store in which he is engaged. In one he would possibly be like the proprietor who does not realize his selling power and does not look for salesmanship in his clerk. He is one who hands out goods but does not try to increase his power. With a real grocer, such as is found in fairly large numbers to-day, this same clerk would be a real salesman having acquired the selling sense of his new employer.

Thus, the one grocer could afford to pay more money than the other for the reason that the one store was earning more than the other and more was demanded from the clerk.

Clerks That Are Valuable.

On the other hand there is the clerk who by his personality, intelligent salesmanship methods, attention to details and thoughtfulness waits on a customer for the first time, and she, returning home, is impressed by the treatment received and returns again and again until she is recognized as a customer. Or a clerk may possess the art of window-dressing by which he brings business which a mediocre arrangement of the display would not have attracted.

It is safe to say that instances like these are more numerous than those of the clerk who causes the losses referred to. The one should be advised to seek some other work, while the other be prized and developed as much as possible.

A quality that is very necessary is an unfailing amiability. The grocer and his clerk should be almost superhuman in this respect, for the average man occasionally feels out of sorts. If he is liable to this failing it would be better for him to leave the store until it passes away, for customers do not take to a grouchy greeting when they enter a store.

Avenues of Loss in Grocery Business

Leaks Which Dealers and Their Clerks Ought to Watch—Many Thefts Made by the Dishonest Employe—Trouble Caused by Discourtesy and Mistakes in Rendering Accounts—Losses Due to Overweight.

By Walter Thompson.

Business leaks are easily remedied once they are located but it is the locating them that presents the big difficulty. The average grocer must of necessity place a certain amount of trust in his employes and the grocer who has good, industrious, thoughtful clerks, those who know the selling game and its side lines, has a business asset that should not be underestimated.

Some leaks are due to thoughtlessness and others are quite deliberate. The grocer who leaves all the lights in his store burning at night is guilty of carelessness. Simple cheap devices can be arranged by which the window lights will be turned off automatically at an hour when the people have deserted the streets.

The Speculative Man.

The grocer who takes money which he requires for his grocery business to invest in the stock market and, when he needs ready cash again, cuts prices to get the cash in his hand is guilty of a deliberate injury to his business, and knowingly creates a leak.

The clerk who pilfers, in plainer words robs, his employer of goods or of cash does so with full knowledge of his misdeed. This is a leak that is the result of deliberation. When he gives more goods than a customer pays for, or crowds old goods to the back of a shelf putting the new in front, he is guilty of carelessness. Thus nearly all leaks can be classified as either premeditated, that is, carefully thought out by some party, and on the other hand they may be the result of lack of thoughtfulness.

Giving Overweight.

The writer knows a clerk, of about 21 who when he first went into a grocery store four or five years ago was extremely careless in weighing goods, so much so that he had a regular following who preferred him to serve them. He was not downright dishonest but his employer had not impressed upon him the value of care and plain common sense. The clerk did not feel that he was giving goods away and what was lacking was a quiet little talk from the employer on the dependence he had to place on his clerk.

Saturday Night Thefts.

In that same store was a delivery boy of about nineteen whom the proprietor knew or at least he should have known was inclined to be lightfingered. When in the rush of business on Saturday night the orders were being rushed out for the nine-thirty delivery a stray basket of grapes, can of pork and beans, loaf of bread, box or two of candies or other articles regularly found their way to the delivery wagon and afterwards to the barn where the employe had a regular hiding place for his refreshments.

Then on Sunday when he would come down to the stable to clean things up, he generally had a pal, and together they had a light collation at the expense of the proprietor who was then at church, unsuspicious of the fact that one of his employes was thus cutting down his profits. The character of the goods taken depended upon the season of the year and of course, the quantity on hand.

These incidents are actual happenings and there are many other clerks who if the truth were known, have been guilty of the same petty thefts. As another example of how these young men worked the game, a can of strawberries or pineapples—these were favorites—was placed in a box in which an order had been put up by a clerk and left with the other boxes for delivery. Then the route employe carried them out to the wagon and the proprietor was out fifteen for every tin. Boiled ham was another article that disappeared through the same channel and for "wet" goods ginger-beer and strawberry wine suffering most. Cheese was still another delicacy.

Got Hungry Regularly.

Grocers know that one begins to feel a little hungry about four o'clock in the afternoon and practically every day at that hour these two, the young clerk and the delivery boy, would have a little repast at the expense of the house and they would then return better prepared for work, as they used to laughingly say.

They had a regular list of utensils including can opener, corkscrew, spoon, drinking glasses and of course, their jack knives. Just before closing up on Saturday night, was another favorite time of having a little "snack." All of this was not a case of stealing goods and taking them home but still it was a leak.

A large pail of chocolate chips, gave evidence of being a regular money maker for the store, but the clerks acquired a decided weakness for them and money was actually lost. This was a fairly large store employing about ten clerks and when the orders were made up with an extra parcel no one but the two employes, who worked together, knew anything about it, and indeed it was practically impossible to catch them unless a suspicion was first formed.

Causes of Other Losses.

The grocer and his clerks cause leaks by discourtesy to purchasers, poor service when promptness has been promised, errors by the clerical staff by which a customer is charged in her bill for some goods she did not purchase and on discovering it jumps at the conclusion that an attempt has been made to cheat her, impertinence by the delivery men and impoliteness. In fact it is simply out of the question to expect a grocer with a big staff to keep a close eye on all the business and it is better to put confidence in the clerks and endeavor by every means to have them take as much interest in the business as if it were their own. If this can be secured the dealer need not worry much but grocers say that clerks of this kind are not born every minute in the day.

Greater Care Necessary.

The writer knows of a woman who discovered an error in her bill caused by confusion resulting from several customers having the same name and the clerk did not properly initial them. That woman stopped buying at the store stating that she could not be bothered examing every item on her bill to see whether she had bought it or not.

There are leaks that can be more easily prevented than those mentioned above. It should not be a difficult matter to educate customers to pay their bills regularly and frequently. That is the best way of stopping the big account and the long-lived one when credit is given.

Attention is the special antidote to these leaks. The grocer with his eyes open and who by his own experience knows where to look for outlets will be able to keep the plugs in better than will those who are careless and thoughtless.

Country Prices Lower than Catalogue

Comparisons Between Big Mail Order House Prices and Those of a Country Merchant—They Illustrate That Latter Can Sell Cheaper—One Merchant Not Afraid to Allow Customers to See Catalogues—How he Talks to His Trade.

"I leave two catalogues, one belonging to each of two big mail order houses, lying on the counter all the time," remarked a village general merchant, in referring to the fact that he could give better prices than these big stores.

"Why, the other day Mrs. —— came in and happened to see them for the first time.

"'Oh. I see you have —— and —— catalogues; I didn't think you would let anybody see them,' she said.

"I explained that that was just why I placed them there; I wanted everybody to look them over to see wherein our prices were cheaper than theirs. Every opportunity I get I point out this fact to them and by continually 'rubbing it in' gracefully, you know, I think I haven't a customer who sends away for any of her goods. I sell everything that might be required in a house. If one of my customers needs a piano or a stove they come to me."

This merchant conducts a business in a small country village about 90 miles from Toronto—a business that is now more than half a century old. He doesn't worry over mail order houses, because he has continually been teaching his customers that it is to their own advantage to deal at home, and they are doing it.

His Talk Backed by Facts.

Comparisons of a few prices of his grocery department articles with those from a mail-order house catalogue which are given on this page, readily show the effectiveness of this merchant's talks. These comparisons illustrate clearly that merchants throughout the country can sell goods just as cheaply as the catalogue houses, and therefore that they have a strong weapon to use in their personal conversations and newspaper advertising in favor of dealing at home. They can, of course, as well, point out occasionally the loyalty that every citizen of a community should show in the upbuilding of his own section; that every cent of money spent to purchase goods away from home which could be bought just as cheaply at home meant depreciation of land value, etc., but the greatest talking points are the price, freight and express considered, and the quality.

A Poor Policy.

"Whenever a merchant mentions the mail order people in a condemning spirit he only turns so much attention their way," said the merchant. "Let him treat this opposition as an opposition to be respected, and on business principles, and by so doing he will strengthen his own standing."

"You might be able to get a bargain or two, if you were on the spot," he often says to a customer, "but to order from a catalogue you are paying more than you need to, and I'll be only too glad to show you."

This same merchant, in speaking about a competitor across the street, declared that if anyone were to bring a mail order catalogue into his store, he believed he would almost shoot him. It is this very antipathy and bitterness against the mail order house which turns so much business its way. It ought to be treated respectfully, if for no other reason than it is glad to hear of bitter opposition from merchants. This is part of its advertising scheme. But when it is considered on a business basis, money talks every time and good is sure to result.

Advertising Price Comparisons.

Many dealers have found it profitable to advertise in the newspapers, such comparisons of prices as are given here. The "C" represents the catalogue price and the "G" the grocer's. By doing this a few times, customers become educated to deal at home; they are shown that it is most profitable for them to do so and when this fact has been impressed upon them, the advertising method might be changed.

Merchants who have overcome the trade going to mail order houses say that the only sure way is by the means of live up-to-date methods.

EXPORTS TO U. S.

For the 4 months ending July 31, 1909, there were shipped from Canada to the United States $56,090 worth of codfish; $23,769 of halibut; $23,769 of fresh lobsters; and $91,925 worth of fresh salmon. The corresponding figures of 1910 are $64,039; $59,097; $294,003; and $98,003. During the four months ending July 31, 1910, Canada's exports to the U. S. included $10,655 in cheese; $152,600 in tea; $63,684 in tobacco and its manufactures.

Through error the names of agents for Carr & Co., Carlisle, England, were omitted from their advertisement in our issue of October 21. The agents are: Wm. H. Practical Methods in Retail Stores

Plans in Brief From all Parts of Canada For Making More Money—Saving Bacon ends, Creating Demand for Oysters, Sausage, Pickles, Etc.—Cash Carriers in Ontario Store Faciliate Work of The Clerks—How Montreal Dealer Teaches His Clerks Selling Points of Goods.

Want By-law Repealed.

Belleville, Ont., Oct. 27.—The case of the city against Fenn & Son, on the charge of selling groceries after 7.30 p.m. contrary to the early closing grocery by-law was recently decided by Police Magistrate Masson. Mr. Fenn's contention was that he was running a large meat business many times the size of his grocery trade and he submitted figures to substantiate his argument.

The magistrate found that the butcher business being much larger than the grocery the early closing grocery by-law did not apply, and hence the charge was dismissed.

At the next meeting of the city council a petition signed by a majority of those engaged in the grocery business in the city will be presented, asking that the by-law be repealed.

Makes Money Out of Boxes.

Winnipeg, Oct. 27. — That there is money in saving boxes is illustrated by a local grocer, who makes quite a sum every month in selling them. He finds a good demand from people willing to pay as high as 25, 30 and 40 cents for them, so is very careful in his unpacking operations.

Boxes, he says, are scarce and if a merchant takes enough pains in pulling the nails with a nail-puller he is in a position to make a tidy sum every year on boxes alone, which is practically money found.

Troublesome Sugar Question.

Vancouver, B. C., Oct. 27.—The selling of sugar at a profit is still troubling retailers here. A certain departmental store is paying $5.80—the same as everyone else—for the product of the local refinery and selling it at $5. The retailers have been attempting to have the cutting of the retail price discontinued, but they have not succeeded.

It was threatened that Chinese sugar would be brought in, but it is not likely that this will be done in any event. Now a company proposes to establish a refinery up the Fraser river at Mission. The Vancouver Retail Grocers' Association is to meet these people to see if any arrangements can be made whereby prices of their product can be protected. The product of this refinery will be beet root sugar.

Quoted Prices in Dodger.

Toronto, Oct. 27. — T. F. Dove, 102 Wilton Ave., proprietor of The Cash Grocery Store, recently got out a dodger which he claims secured good results.

He began it with "The Exhibition is over, but Dove's Cash Butchers and Grocers still remain at 102 Wilton Ave., etc.," in large type. This was followed by "To quote you quality goods at low prices—specials Friday and Saturday—1,000 lbs. choice creamery butter, 28c per lb.; granulated sugar, 18 lbs. for $1;" quotations were also given on gem jars, pints, pickling spice, followed up by "For one week only rubber rings, quarts and pints, 5 cents dozen."

Mr. Dove recognizes the value of quoting prices in such an advertisement.

Brightened Up the Store.

Lindsay, Ont., Oct. 27. — Extensive improvements have been made in A. L. Campbell's grocery store. The cellar has been renovated by putting in a cement floor and brightening the walls. A large number of shelves have been installed and on these will be arranged a large, newly-arrived consignment of canned goods. The china hall will also be moved to the basement and will be displayed to better advantage. The department formerly occupied by the chinaware will be converted into a feed and store house. The front windows of the store have been much improved by metallic walls painted a greyish white. The main part of the store has been otherwise renovated and cleaned and a new lighting system has been installed.

Mr. Campbell believes it takes a well-cleaned, spic and span store with nicely arranged goods to attract customers.

Selling Talks to Clerks.

Montreal, Oct. 27.—"How do I find so many good salesmen for my store?" said a St. James St. retailer, in reply to a question; "I don't find them, I make them. Any bright man can be a good salesman with the proper assistance. At least once a week I hold an informal meeting for fifteen or twenty minutes and take up some one article in the store, going over its particular selling points and the best methods of bringing these home to the customer. I find this creates more interest in salesmanship than any other method, and incidently it is a great time saver, as a clerk who knows the points of an article will dispose of it much more rapidly than one who simply has vague ideas on the subject.

"Of course it requires study to enable the proper line of argument to be given, but a few hours spent this way pay for themselves many times over in the results."

Advertising Winter Supplies.

Halifax, N.S., Oct. 27.—Grocery stores in this district depend a great deal on fishermen as well as farmers for their trade and among those who make extra efforts to get a portion of this is Wentzell's, Limited. They run advertisements in the district press calling attention to their efficiency in supplying such men with big supplies.

A recent advertisement of theirs under the heading "Fall and Winter Supply of Groceries" read as follows:

> "We are right ready to fill the wants of those farmers, fishermen and other sea-faring folks and all others who at this time of the year put by enough groceries, feed, etc., to last them until the next spring. Buying in large quantities and taking advantage of all discounts, we are in a position and do quote lowest cash prices on tea, flour, sugar, molasses, rice, barley, beans, pork, beef, lard, feed, oil, rolled oats, raisins, tobaccos, cigars and the various small items of groceries.
> "Whether you want the whole supply, or but one of the items, it is only doing yourself justice to get our prices."

The above was neatly set in a box border and presented an attractive appearance.

Cash Carriers Save Clerks' Time.

Stratford, Ont., Oct. 27.—In the Barnsdale Trading Co's store here is a system which takes all the parcelling of orders out of the hands of the salesmen and salesladies behind the counter. This firm have the cash carrier system in effect which conveys the customer's order in duplicate to the business office. It is made out in triplicate, the customer getting the other copy. If cash has been paid it is placed in the till and the order slip stamped paid; if credit, the transaction is booked. In either case the original order is sent on—the duplicate being kept—by means of the overhead carrier to another department at the rear of the store where a staff does nothing else but put up parcels. Delivery men know exactly where to get their respective parcels which are all carried out by means of a side door and passage, to the wagon on the main street.

This system facilitates the work of the salespeople who have more time to use their selling abilities since they are not hampered by putting up parcels.

Advertising and Window Display.

Montreal, Oct. 27.—"One of the most mistaken ideas, and yet a very prevalent one," said a Montreal retailer recently, "is the display in windows of lines other than those advertised at the same time in the local papers."

"To feature one or two lines at a time is sufficient, and there must be co-operation between the two mediums to obtain the best results. Personally I find that the simple windows containing an attractive display of only one or two lines proves the most effective. Backing this up by the papers and the selling ability of the staff, the effect is bound to be an increased sale of the articles in question, and indirectly other lines which are needed by the customers attracted by the feature articles. Nothing is gained by trying to display a dozen different lines at once."

Demonstrated at the Fair.

New Westminster, B.C., Oct. 27.—As a means of gaining new customers and of increasing the demands of regular store patrons, C. A. Welsh believes in demonstrations. At the time of the Industrial Exhibition in New Westminster earlier in the month he had a demonstration which aroused a great deal of interest and which he claims brought him considerable new business.

In arranging his booth he had piles of groceries stacked attractively, the packages and cans being relieved by handsome glass jars of preserves. W. Marshall was in charge and talked to the bystanders on the quality and advantages of different brands of goods handled. A young lady served coffee and wafers and a favorable impression on Mr. Welsh's goods was the result.

Goods Sold for 25 Cents.

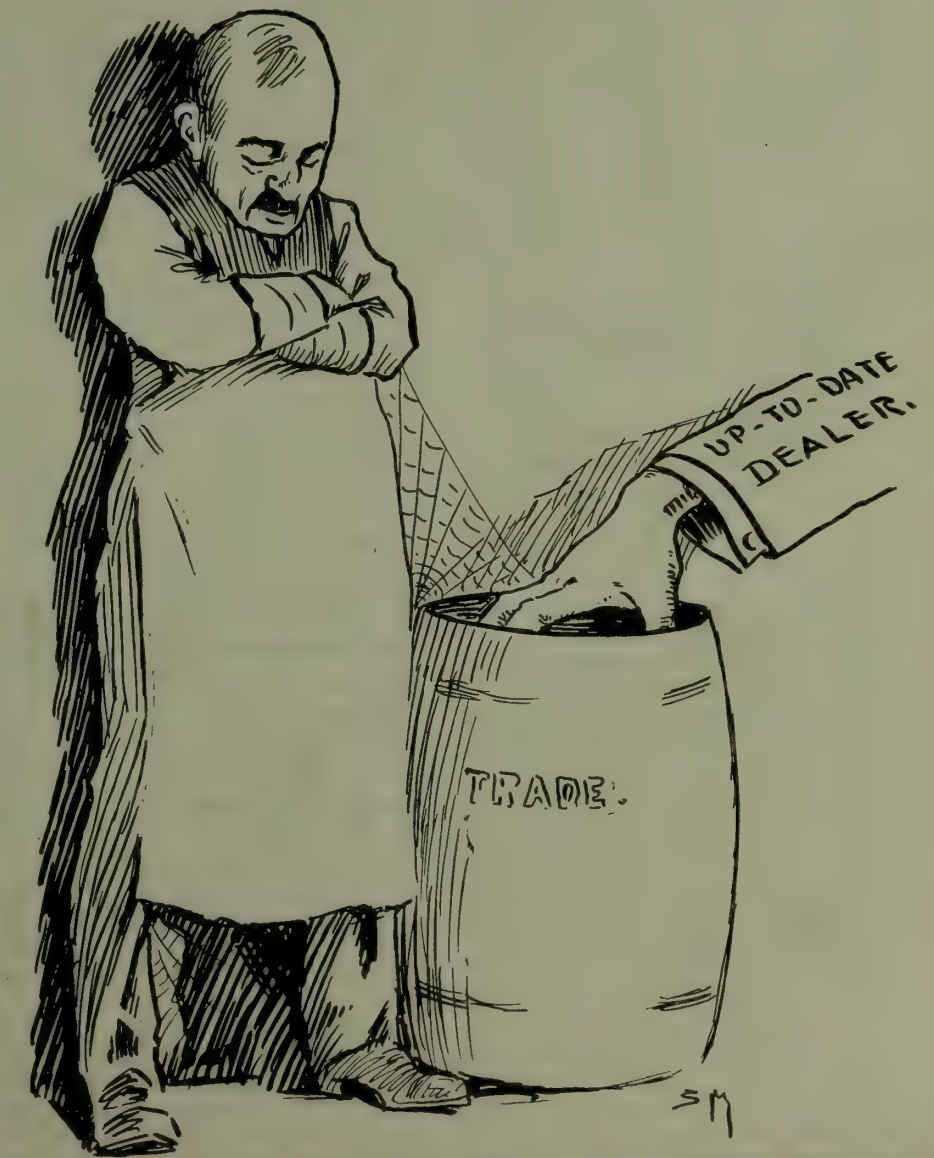
Fredericton, N. B., Oct. 27.—In a recent advertisement in the local press Yerxa's grocery calls the attention of readers to a list of goods which they were offering for 25 cents. This was given only in one section of their ad., the remainder of the space being utilized to advertise other goods.

Among the list of goods they offered for 25 cents were the following:

3 lbs. raisins, 7 lbs. sweet potatoes, 10 lbs. granulated oatmeal, 8 bars Yerxa's soap, 15 cakes toilet soap, 3 bottles flavoring extract, 5 lbs. best codfish, 3 lbs. dates, 4 rolls toilet paper, 3 bottles Worcester sauce, and 6 bars castile soap.

Loses Nothing on Bacon Ends.

Ottawa, Ont., Oct. 27.—"Do you know that there is usually a loss on bacon?" asked T. W. Collins, a local grocer, who claims to have adopted a method of selling it which will obviate the same. When he cuts a shoulder of bacon, he slices the first few orders off one end, then he reverses the piece, and slices the following orders from this end until he has a piece from 2 to 4 lbs. remaining, which portion is always a choice piece of meat, so that when a customer asks for a piece of bacon of about three pounds' weight, he has just what is wanted and there are no small unsalable pieces left. Thus the whole shoulder has been disposed of.



Created Demand for Sausages.

Hull, Que., Oct. 27—A Saturday special sale of sausages is one of the "out of the ordinary" methods of a local grocer in an outlying ward. He arranged with a packing house to handle their fresh sausages every Saturday, and has built up quite a demand for them. It was something of a venture at first, but as soon as the people in the neighborhood heard of his innovation they remembered that they liked sausages, and bought from the grocer.

He has steadily increased the number of purchasers and believes the handling of sausages has increased his business in other lines.

High Prices on Luxuries.

Quebec, Oct. 27—"Grocers are often asked by their customers why they charge so high for an article de luxe, a line which must surely yield the vendor a large profit," said a local dealer. "The retailer is quite justified in his large profit on such goods because sales are neither numerous nor frequent, and he must not lose sight of the fact that he has, proportionately, more capital tied up in stocking such an article."

QUEBEC MARKETS

POINTERS:—

Sugar—Declined 15c

Evaporated Apples—Advanced 3c.

Beans—Declined 15c.

Peas and Tomatoes—Advanced 10c all lines.

Montreal, Oct. 27.—Trade here this fall has been good indeed in almost every grocery line. Not only has trade been brisk, but in the majority of cases the prices have been well maintained. Collections have been better than the average, and the buying has been done from places new to this market, as well as from all the former ones. With this encouraging start it will be rather strange if grocers do not make money this fall and winter. Even through the summer conditions were a decided improvement over those of last year.

The feature of the week is the decline of sugar, an additional 15c last Tuesday at 1.30. While this was only the natural result of raw market conditions, it came in spite of increased local buying. It was thought that this influence would be sufficient to delay the decline, but evidently it was not.

Coffee is attracting considerable attention, and buyers are apparently holding off to see which will win out, the bull or bear influence.

Sugar—Sugar has again declined, and this time 15c in Montreal and 10c in Winnipeg. Although this has been deemed certain to come soon it was hardly expected until later in the week, as buying has been rather heavy recently, and it was thought the market would be supported to a slight extent. However, the continued decline of the raw market made it a case of necessity. At present there seems to be no bottom to the raw market, prices now being at or below the cost of production. The German beet crop is the main cause. It is big enough, according to recent reports, to furnish all the sugar necessary for this year, even if the Cuban crop were entirely wiped out. As to the damage done by the recent storms to the Cuban crop, evidently first reports were largely exaggerated. The amount done by the first amounted to only about $5,000, a mere bagatelle. Definite news as to the second is not yet to hand, but it is evidently nothing very serious. Unless something unforeseen occurs, there are still further declines in prospect in the near future, though there may be enough buying orders to support the market for a short time. The price of sugar on Oct. 27 last year was $4.60 for standard granulated, a decline of 10c having taken place Oct. 10th.

Syrups and Molasses—Already the call for molasses is beginning to strengthen and several large orders have been booked for early November shipment by local jobbers. If present prophecies of an extra cold winter are fulfilled, there will be a large increase over last year in the demand for this commodity. It is needed, as importers have considerable on their hands in storage here, which they have not been able to dispose of yet on a profitable basis. Also, the jobbers report rather large stocks. Taking into account the amount in Montreal at present, the prices are being held remarkably well. This is undoubtedly on the expectation of a larger than usual winter trade. Syrups continue to have a brisk sale at current prices, and are evidently growing in popularity through the country districts. This element may hurt the molasses prospects to some extent, but the normal annual increase in consumption should account for a good deal of the extra trade.

Tea—Low-grade Ceylons are apparently enjoying the best demand just now, though there is considerable trade passing in all lines. The local Japan market is holding well at firm prices. The sales noted are, however, in rather small lots. Evidently dealers are only buying for immediate requirements. Reports from New York give similar conditions as existing there. Evidently the tea business has about settled down to its steady winter gait.

Coffee—This week the coffee market is practically beating time. Roasters have laid in sufficient supplies to carry them for some time to come, and are apparently waiting to see who will win out, the bulls or the bears. It begins to look as if the tide were turning in favor of the latter. Conditions do not warrant any further advance in coffees in fact, with the amount of coffee in sight it begins to look like a declining market, though probably not to any great extent. At any rate, the feeling of uncertainty is gaining strength among the large roasters, and they expect to hold off until the market settles itself one way or the other. Undoubtedly there is considerable foundation for the bear reports regarding the growing crop in Brazil, and conditions there may prove sufficiently bad to warrant holding the present prices, but no further advances are looked for.

Spices—Reports are being circulated of a short crop in cloves. This has caused added activity in this market, and prices are firm. In confirmation of these reports future prices on this spice are too high to permit of much business being done until more definite information comes to hand. Peppers seem to have firmed up sympathetically, for there is no new feature to cause it except that. The tone of the whole market is quiet but firm, with a steady trade passing at former quotations. The orders are in smaller lots than formerly, but the totals seem to be about as large as before.

Dried Fruits—The recent arrival of Mediterranean fruits coming in on a bare market produced a brisk trade for small lots in these lines. Evidently dealers were only buying for immediate requirements to tide over until the arrival of the second boat, which will be in the course of a couple of weeks. In Malaga raisins the demand is light and present stocks are ample for all the requirements. Dates are having a fairly brisk sale at firm prices. Figs are firm at the recent advance, and are in good demand. The demand for currants is one of the features of the week. It looks as if the country buyers all wanted theirs at about the same time. This has resulted in added firmness in this market.

Evaporated Apples—Winter grades are now arriving, and the short apple crop of this year has forced the price up to 11c, an advance of 3c over former prices. Even at this price the best grades are hard to obtain, and it looks like a high market all winter. Of course, it is hard to say just how small the production will be this year, but all reports received so far seem to coincide that the high-grade stock will be light. Exporters seem to be uncertain how far this will affect them. During the past year evaporated apples were not at all popular in this country, and there was an over-supply for export. If the same lack of local consumption prevails there may be plenty for the foreign trade.

Beans and Peas—Large supplies coming in have depressed the bean market 15c. At this lower level there is a brisk trade passing, and evidently dealers have only been holding off for some such drop as this. Winter stocks have been neglected for some time past, owing to the high state of the market, and it is only during the past few days that there has been any decided change in conditions. Peas are selling quite freely at current prices, and there seems to be an ample supply for all demands.

CANNED GOODS

MONTREAL.—Heavy sales for future delivery have caused an advance of 10c in all lines of peas and tomatoes. Buyers are taking all of these two lines allowed them, and in view of the rather short crop the advance had to come. There is certain to be a scarcity in these lines this winter, as the demand is much larger than last year, and the pack falls considerably short. Further advances are looked for, unless the buying falls off to a very considerable extent.

All lines of fruit and vegetables are firmly held with a good demand passing.

In fish salmon stocks are rapidly becoming depleted with poor prospects of replenishment. There are practically no Humpbacks on the market, and the other lines show great scarcity. About the only ones left are Clover Leaf and Horseshoe, and they were advanced recently, as reported in these columns.

Meats are rather too high for the present market prices of live stock, and the effect is to make a rather dull, weak market. In face of the declining meat prices it looks as if present prices for the canned goods would drop before long.

TORONTO—From reports at hand it would seem that the canned goods market from the price standpoint is unsettled. Sales for the most part depend upon different conditions. One house may be well supplied with a certain line, and can afford to dispose of it at first prices, but in peas, tomatoes and salmon the tendency is to get away from the opening prices. Stocks are claimed to be too short in most cases to warrant holding to the original prices, and many sales have been made on a higher basis. Some jobbers have bought at prices higher than those at which retailers bought, and it certainly is not probable that they will dispose of such goods at a loss. The opening price for tomatoes, $1.12½ to $1.15 is being left behind, and $1.25 seems to be the general price for group B goods. Similarly peas have been selling for the most part around $1.25, and are practically an impossible purchase because of the light stocks.

Among the trade it is reported that sockeye halves are practically up 35 cents a case. They may be bought yet at the old price, but from the information received, the advance has been made at the coast, and it is but a matter of time until the price is put up locally. Salmon has been considered valuable holding, and an advance will not be regarded as much of a surprise. The authority for the increase that may be announced at any time, is from a reliable source, and the trade may look forward to the change.

On the whole the canned goods market is holding its position firmly.

ONTARIO MARKETS

POINTERS:—
Sugars—Another decline.
Salmon—Advance expected.
Coffee—Held firmly.

Toronto, Oct. 27.—The sugar market refuses to leave the centre of the grocery stage just now, and claims attention this week by another decline, making the third in three weeks. The wholesale trade have been looking for this movement, and readers of these columns have been kept in close touch with the market and with the opinions of probable movements, as judged by those who have had a long connection with the sugar business. It is hardly necessary to cover the ground of the causes again, as they are practically the same as last week, and are mentioned further in this report The drop this week was announced on Tuesday to be 15c, and that it was a general decline. On Wednesday, however, it was learned that but one firm had made a drop to that extent, and that 10c was general for the rest. No one seems to know exactly whether there will be any further movements, but the statistical position of sugar shows an immense crop, and some jobbers are inclined to believe that a lower basis will yet be reached.

Sugar—On Tuesday afternoon of this week information was sent out announcing still another decline in the price of sugar, this time a drop of fifteen cents. The next morning the trade did not know exactly where they were at, for while the 15-cent decline held good for one company, representatives of another would not confirm it, and afterwards reported that their new prices showed a reduction of only 10c. Just how long this difference of price will continue is difficult to tell. Some of the jobbers considered that it would not be more than a few days. However, in regard to the decline itself, this is the third within three weeks, and readers of these columns have had the benefit of reliable opinions of the market, which emphasized the weakness of the raw markets, and cautioned the trade to look for lower prices. With this third reduction, the market is about reaching a level which it has been believed to be in keeping with the raw markets. One jobber expressed his opinion that a further decline might be looked for, holding, as he does, that the bottom price has not yet been reached.

Just what the next move will be it is difficult to tell. The influences that were concentrated on the market last week are still at work. The season of heavy demand has practically spent itself, and enquiries from retailers are not as numerous, the new crop reports indicate an abnormally heavy production of both cane and beet raws, and altogether it is a bearish market.

Syrups—Some houses have been booming corn syrups with good results lately, and a heavy business is reported coming in from all parts of the country. The prices of corn are holding firmly for present delivery, but December deliveries are reduced. It is expected by some that with the heavy corn crop of the present year there is a possibility of further reductions in quotations, but the indications for any further movement at present are not prominent. The last drop has had a good effect on the market and has been largely responsible for the increased trade.

Dried Fruits—Primary dried fruit markets are holding their own. Valencia raisins are still quoted at from 28 to 30 shillings, and owing to a good demand from London buyers and others in the Old Country, the market is not losing ground. There has not been much change in the currant situation. Prices dropped from their highest point, but there was not the reaction that some anticipated. Apricots have been pretty well cleaned up, and prunes are scarce and dear. They are being offered principally in large sizes. The seeded raisin market is inclined to be quiet. The demand for dried fruits is satisfactory and is beginning to settle down to a steady basis.

Valencia Raisins—Advanced.

Evaporated Apples—New material firm.

Dates—Advanced.

Winnipeg, Oct. 27, 1910—For the past few weeks, covering the period when a general advance in market prices was in order, there was a marked holding off on the part of merchants. This was only natural as the wholesalers and merchants alike were not sure of the actual condition in many strong lines and it was thought that prices might be reduced when new stuff came on the market. At the present time, however, there is a decided reconciliation toward the present condition and the ordering is again quite normal.

Sugar—Another decline of 10 cents occurred here on Tuesday making in all 30 cents during the past month. The cause is attributed to the large production of the German sugar beet. The output in the west during the fruit season was rather disappointing, but merchants of late have been stocking well and a good trade is going on. The fancies are now going out freely in anticipation of a splendid holiday trade.

Foreign Dried Fruits—The European demand, particularly for prunes, has run the stock down to a limited quantity for the Canadian trade. The price here is advancing and higher prices are sure to rule before the winter is out. Valencia raisins which are moving at $2.55 for 4 Crown layers will remain high. The quality is excellent and although the price is stronger than usual, a good quantity is moving and will continue throughout the West. It is noteworthy that the price is higher than California seeded stuff which is exceptional. Dates have been advanced and are selling from 6 to 6¼, and new stuff will be on the market this week. New figs will arrive this week also, and the quality is said to be good. New peel has come in and the market is not strong and a temporary reduction has been made in orange and citron peel. Lemon peel, however, is quite firm at the price listed below.

BRITISH COLUMBIA MARKETS.

Vancouver, October 27. — Business generally with the trade, especially with the wholesale houses, is much greater than it was this time last year. Prices are stiffening all round, with reductions hardly in evidence anywhere. This week potatoes are up to $25. That is the lower price, Ashcrofts being quoted higher. There has been considerable buying up of potatoes, and the outlook is that high prices will rule during the latter part of the winter. Each year there has been opportunity for those who had stocks, and with all holding on, the supply should be sufficient.

NOVA SCOTIA MARKETS.

Halifax, N. S., Oct. 27.—Dealers report a good volume of business in all wholesale grocery lines. On the whole trade is fully up to the average for the season of the year. As the price of sugar is a little easier, increased sales are reported. Extra standard granulated is now quoted at $4.90 in barrel lots. Unbranded yellow is selling at $4.25.

The market is almost bare of dried fruits. The Halifax agents, however, have been advised that the steamer Jacona is now on the way from Mediterranean ports, and will be due at Halifax about Nov. 1. This steamer is also bringing a large cargo of dried fruit for Montreal and upper Canadian points.

NEW BRUNSWICK MARKETS.

St. John, N. B., Oct. 27.—Few changes have been recorded in the local market during the last week. Sugar declined again on Tuesday 10 cents, making 30 cents in a month's time. Cornmeal is easier, and is quoted at $1.40 to $1.45, in bags.

Reduced Prices in Many Lines of Pork

Deliveries of Hogs Have Been Liberal and Prices Have Sought Lower Basis—Egg Quotations Have Made a Sharp Advance, Owing to Scarcity of Supplies and a Good Demand—Poultry Seems to be Plentiful for the Holiday, Although Turkeys are Inclined to be Scarce—Production of Butter is Still Heavy.

Prices have been moving somewhat in these markets during the past week. Eggs are becoming dearer and a high price is demanded for new-laids. These are scarce and dealers find them difficult to secure. Storage eggs are being largely used, owing to the scarcity of supplies, and everything points to high prices for new eggs.

In provisions the tendency has been downward. Supplies are coming in more freely, and prices have sagged, taking with them the prices of some lines of pork. Jobbers say there is a good demand, and account for the decline by the increased supplies. The easier feeling is quite general. Prices of lard are steady.

The production of butter still holds at a high figure, owing to the continued heavy yield of milk. Prices are inclined to drop, and in some places are quoted at reduced figures. The demand is not sufficient to absorb the supply, with the result that the market is weakened under the overload.

A good price is being realized for cheese just now by the makers. The export demand has been good and the prices paid at country boards have ranged from 11c to 11⅝c, which is considered a pretty good showing. Home demand is steady at a stationary price.

Reports have been circulated recently of blackheads showing in turkeys, but it is generally believed that if this does exist outside of the imagination of some newspaper writers, that the cases are isolated. Turkeys are not coming in any too freely for the holiday, but at this time of the year they are hardly ready for the market. Jobbers state that they do not look for any reduced supplies this year. Reports of this kind are always circulated about the time the turkey season opens. This year it is expected that supplies will be about an average, possibly a little below it, but not appreciably so.

Geese and chickens are coming in plentifully enough, as are also ducks. On the whole, the poultry market seems to be normal and satisfactory.

MONTREAL.

Provisions—Trade is much less than might have been expected at the low market level now prevailing. This is due to the expectation of still lower prices. However, buying must soon be taken up in earnest, as winter is approaching rapidly, and prophets say it will be a cold one. If this is the case, the situation will become much stronger. Live hogs are down to 8c, and dressed to 11¾c, otherwise the market is steady at last quotations. Arrivals from the country are numerous and this in spite of the low prices to be obtained for them.

Butter—Prices are easier in the country, but this is causing no undue uneasiness among dealers, as stocks in Montreal are lower than they have been for some time past, and, in addition, western orders have been booked to a much greater extent than ever before. Additional inquiries from this source are coming in almost daily. A short spell of cold weather would stiffen the market materially and leave dealers with prospects of a successful winter. Receipts for the week are 6,070 packages, as against 5,996 same week last year. For the season they are 376,805 packages, as against 332,972 same season last year.

Cheese—Cheese matters are beginning to quiet down, and the only arrivals now are of October make. The feature seems to be the scarcity of colored, as compared with white, and also the fact that the colored is in much greater demand. Why this is so no one has as yet given a good explanation, but it apparently is only one of the trade vagaries. Shipments have been rather heavy of late, as the navigation season is rapidly drawing to a close. Reports from England show that the New Zealand make is growing in popularity, and it will be necessary for Canadians to make strenuous efforts next year if they are to retain their hold on the market. The loss of our butter trade there, while not exactly a fair comparison, is sufficiently recent to point out what must not happen again. Receipts for the week are 62,034 boxes, as against 56,151 same week last year. For the season they are 1,760,410 boxes, as against 1,750,277 same season last year.

Eggs—As prophesied last week, new-laids have advanced to 40c. Eggs are evidently going to be "eggs" this winter if all the signs are to be believed. While supplies are coming in fairly well, local stocks are low and the quality of the arrivals is not all that could be desired. Until the hoped-for legislation is obtained, making it a criminal offence to sell rotten eggs, this condition of affairs must be expected. Receipts for the week are 3,018 cases, as against 1,351 same week last year. For the season they are 174,197 cases, as against 178,398 same season last year.

Honey—Clover comb honey is scarce and the price has firmed up to a slight extent. This will undoubtedly be a firm market through the winter, as there is no replenishment in view. In buckwheat the situation is the reverse. There was a great deal left over from last year, and in addition the new crop has been large. This has caused a weak feeling in the market, and although no reduction has taken place, it is not expected that the present level will be held for long. Trade in general is fair, considering it is this early in the year.

Poultry—Poultry is coming in more freely than a few weeks ago, but even now there is room for improvement. This is particularly true of chickens, which are higher as a result. A few geese are on the market, but in no quantity to enable any accurate judgment as to what will be the price level. At present they are bringing about 13c. Preparations are well under way to handle the Thanksgiving trade, and, until after that date, prices will certainly be firm and high as usual. Afterward is the temporary slackening until the Christmas rush begins.

Provisions—Prices of pork and most pork products are down this week. Receipts of live hogs by packers have been heavy, and quotations for live hogs at country points slumped to $7.25, and even a slightly lower price than that has been paid. At this season of the year lower prices are generally looked for in the provision market, because of the fact that supplies are more liberally offered. Jobbers state that the demand for hams, bacon and backs continues of yours is dependent very largely upon the quality and the reputation of the goods you sell.

Even a poor salesman can make good in the grocery business if he is careful to buy only stock bearing well-known trade marks that his customer, almost unconsciously, associate with absolute purity and unvarying goodness.

And in the hands of a good salesman proves a wonderful seller. It is made from whole, fresh, ripe tomatoes, spiced just enough to give it a particularly appetizing zest, but not enough to take away the true tomato flavor.

Good salesmen suggest this sauce on all occasions for use on meats, fish, game and for all seasoning purposes where the genuine tomato flavor is desired.

Selling Power and Quality

I am naturally very proud of the reputation quality has earned for Red Rose Tea, and the personal interest, the selling confidence retailers all over Canada have shown and are showing in Red Rose Tea, is most pleasing to me.

For sixteen years I have sought the co-operation of the retail merchants, and I do not hesitate to state frankly that to a very large extent the marvellous success of Red Rose Tea is due to the selling power and friendliness of the dealers, backed by the highest standard of quality in Tea.

Because of its quality it pays YOU to feature Red Rose Tea in your business; display it, advertise it, personally recommend it. It builds permanent business.

A Condition— Not a Theory

THE questions that confront the intelligent Grocer are not easy ones. They require analyzing to the smallest detail and a keen foresight of the ultimate results. The popularity of "package" goods over the old-fashioned "bulk" goods has resulted in a large increase of branded grocery specialties. This condition forces the retailer to discriminate between goods that are recognized as the standard of quality and those that are claimed to be "just as good."

It is the laudable desire of every Grocer to retain his old customers and increase his business by attracting new customers. This can only be accomplished by the personal salesmanship of the dealer and his assistants. The good-will of a business that comes from a long succession of satisfied customers and the advertisement that is given by word of mouth from one pleased customer to a prospective one, are valuable assets, and to acquire them takes many years of earnest endeavor to supply to his customers nothing but pure and wholesome goods.

Profits are sometimes deceptive. The IMMEDIATE profit on some branded article may be greater than on another article of the same kind, for the reason that goods that are made from the highest grade materials cost more to manufacture and cannot possibly be sold to the trade as cheaply as the short-lived "just as good" kinds, which at their best are but imitations ---cheaply made from low grade materials. The claims made for such imitations are misleading and the goods themselves are usually unreliable. Good goods that are extensively advertised require less time and effort to sell---will turn over oftener---produce a more lasting and dependable profit in the course of the year---and at the same time retain the good-will and patronage of customers.

There are Good Reasons For Inducing Your Trade To Use

POSTUM

Tea and Coffee do get on the nerves of some folks, causing many obscure ills.

It is not advertising alone that has put Postum where it is to-day. The vast benefit it has done thousands—yes, millions, is the real secret of its steadily increasing sale in every part of the world.

You can help people to dismiss ills caused by tea and coffee by inducing them to change to Postum.

And, Mr. Grocer, did you ever figure the long profit on Postum? Generally better than on Tea and Coffee—and the sale of Postum is guaranteed!

People buy Postum because they like and need it, and it pays the retailer to supply that want—pays him well!

"THERE'S A REASON"

most satisfactory. The best season for cooked hams is over now. Prices as they exist to-day are somewhat higher than at this time last year. The tendency seems to be to work toward lower prices, although with a market changing as frequently as does the provision market, this may not be experienced. However, the tendency is in that direction.

Butter—The butter market is stationary, and if anything is just inclined to weakness, although prices have not been reduced. The country is enjoying such ideal weather for pasturing that the flow of milk refuses to fall off, and, as a result, the make of butter is large. This is responsible for larger supplies than the demand calls for, and, as a result, the market gives evidence of a slight oversupply.

Eggs—There is no backward disposition to the egg market. First qualities are too scarce, and to secure them a big price has to be offered. Advances have been made in all grades, and if the prices are going to continue their upward climb it is difficult to estimate to what heights they will attain. Up to the present they have been consistent, and advances have come steadily. Demand for eggs is good, and business is most satisfactory from that standpoint.

Poultry—The poultry market is steady with everybody looking for a heavy holiday trade. Chickens, ducks and geese are coming in freely with the supplies of turkeys fairly good. Local jobbers say that there is no scarcity of supplies in the country, and that the reports that turkeys are going to be scarce are not well founded. They do not claim more than an average supply, but they do expect the supply to be quite up to the average.

FOR THE CHILLY DAYS

Some of your customers no doubt have been led to think that Shredded Wheat is a "Summer food." Of course it is a Summer food—but it is just as wholesome, nourishing and strengthening in Winter—or in any other season.

Here's a hot dish full of warmth and strength, for a chilly day: Heat the Biscuit in the oven to restore crispness; pour hot milk over it, adding a little cream and a dash of salt. It is better for children or grown-ups than mushy porridges.

Shredded Wheat

is equally delicious in Fall and Winter with sliced bananas, stewed prunes, peaches or other fruits. Take a little time and tell your customers about it. It will please them and add to your profits.

"A FAIR DEAL FOR THE FAIR DEALER"

Twenty Cent Decline in Rolled Oats

Was Expected as a Result of Heavy Yield of Oats This Year—Not Sure That the Drop Has Reached the Bottom Yet—Total Wheat Yield This Year Estimated to be Lower Than Last Year—Brief Gossip of Recent Happenings in the Wheat World—Farmers are Holding Back Supplies for Higher Prices.

Both the flour and rolled oats markets have lost ground during the week and there has been an actual decline in the price of rolled oats, while flour prices remain unchanged, with but a statistical loss against it. The reports from the wheat markets are still most favorable and it is this influence that largely accounts for whatever weakening there has been in the flour situation.

Millers state that as far as Ontario wheat is concerned they can scarcely obtain sufficient supplies. Deliveries are decidedly slow.

Conditions have not changed materially in the western wheat situation. Shipments for last week amounted to 4,549,000 bus. Notwithstanding this heavy drain the western stocks increased by 215,829 bushels owing to unusually large consignments from the west.

In view of the complaint which has fallen every day during the past month from the lips of Canadian exporters, who said they could not even dream of increasing their shipments to Britain until prices assumed an export basis, figures submitted by P. B. MacNamara, Canadian trade commissioner at Manchester, Eng., to the department at Ottawa, have a peculiar interest. The commissioner mentions the fact that in three years Canada has increased her shipments of flour to Great Britain by nearly a hundred per cent., while in the same time the imports from the United States have declined by 120 per cent.

According to the latest estimate of the wheat production in the principal wheat growing countries in the world the total for the present year is 2,300,800,000 bus. as against 3,497,600,000 bushels last year. Heaviest losses have been in Russia, France and the United States, the former country declining 18,000,000 bushels according to estimates.

MONTREAL.

Flour.—The recent weakening in the wheat situation in Chicago has had considerable effect on the local flour market. A weaker tone prevails in all grades. As yet the prices to the retailer have not been affected, but any lengthy wheat weakness will have that effect in time. The cause of the weakness is well defined. Larger quantities of wheat will be available this year than has been the expectation from early reports.

In the unsettled state of the market at present, buyers have been holding off, and even for export the trade has been quiet. Local millers are hoping for a settled market in the near future, as it is now so near the end of the navigation season.

Recent reports go to show that much of the export wheat is going from Canada by way of United States ports in spite of the greater cost of transportation. It is an open question as to whether this will be permanent. It is causing considerable agitation among Montrealers, however.

Rolled Oats.—In sympathy with the wheat weakness in Chicago, there is a decidedly bearish tone to the oat market. This is in spite of the determined attempts of certain large operators to maintain former conditions. Still there is a redeeming feature locally. This is the brisk export demand. Not only is it good, but is improving daily. Evidently foreign buyers are distrustful of the present weak tone, and are taking advantage of it by laying in heavier supplies than usual.

The cornmeal market is quiet, at former prices.

TORONTO.

Flour.—Millers are unanimous in declaring upon the light supplies at the mills. Farmers are holding back probably for two reasons, first because they have many duties to attend to just at present and again, because the price is not exactly satisfactory to them. Whatever the real reasons are the millers are not getting enough supplies. Demand for flour is not heavy just now and conditions altogether are not the most satisfactory. A weaker feeling exists in Chicago wheat markets which is having a general weakening effect and may bring prices down.

Cereals—A decline of twenty cents is announced this week by the big mills. Competition has to some extent been responsible for the decline and stock conditions are said to also warrant it. Demand for cereals is heavy just now and a good trade is passing. High prices are not expected to have a chance under present conditions.

After the Sale Comes Service

You see, Price and Quality being equal, Effectual Service only compels the call-again.

Just so with the LAKE OF THE WOODS, Brother Grocer.

Our interest in YOU does not cease once your name is on the famous "dotted line" under your quantities for a car of FIVE ROSES, or a "mixed car" of the assorted products of the Keewatin Mills.

You not only buy the flour, you buy careful, courteous attention to correspondence, faultless packing and shipping, hoped-for delivery. You get more for your money—the same money—than you can anywhere else.

It has taken all of twenty-one years to perfect this service, a system making all customers friends, Brother Grocer.

Ask the man who deals with the L.W.M. Co.

He will tell you there are three inseparable parts to every LAKE OF THE WOODS sale: Price, Quality, Service.

Consider a while this service.

Lake of the Woods Service

You want your order packed in a pecular manner suited to your trade? We have the facilities, the men, the sincere desire to accommodate—you get what you want, not what we think you want.

You want it shipped this way or that? Your wish is law to our shipping experts—you get what you want the way you want it.

You want it on the 20th? You get it on the 20th, not the 28th or the 30th—you get what you want the way you want it when you want it.

You can't wait for mill shipment? Then storehouses all over the country will keep you going with "small lots" till your ship comes in.

Unexpectedly overstocked, you say? Why, we can divert even at the last minute.

Embarrassed with slow collections? Then will you most appreciate the welcome fact that L. W. M. Salesmanship does not end with "the sale."

Goods damaged in transit—goods stolen—shortage? A postal to us relieves you of all anxious worry. Without cavil the loss is made good; we fight it out with the railway.

Comes a complaint from a valued customer? FIVE ROSES is guaranteed like every L. W. M. product—you lose nothing, your customer loses nothing. Would YOU know what close cooperation means, what splendid satisfaction might be YOURS?

Then take advantage of this threefold system—Price, Quality Service. You will be very welcome as a customer, Brother Grocer, whether it is ten bags or ten cars.

Let us serve YOU, not "some day," but NOW.

CANUCK CEREALS

Make better profits selling Canuck Cereals packed in paper bags

Heretofore Cereals have been sold chiefly in bulk or in advertised cartons.

Selling in bulk you are liable to lose by overweight, waste and deterioration of quality.

Selling in advertised cartons means carrying a big assortment, many of which are slow sellers and all of which pay a very narrow profit.

The happy medium—neither bulk goods nor advertised cartons---is found in Canuck Cereals, packed in attractive, convenient, moisture and dustproof paper bags.

This line gives your customers a more generous weight for their money and allows you a better margin of profit, while it is as easy to handle as advertised cartons. It means no waste, no deterioration, steady and satisfactory sales.

CHRISTIE

A plain business talk to our partners, the Grocers of Canada, about stable profits

Have you ever figured out the source of the only profit worth while in the grocery business? Take your pencil and do it right now.

Transient business does not amount to much.

Your few score or few hundred dependable customers—mainly your particular buyers—make up your paying trade.

They are precisely the customers who make your good will a valuable asset.

These customers insist on the best groceries—inferior goods will not satisfy them.

If they want biscuits they demand

CHRISTIE BISCUITS

because it's a matter of common knowledge that Christie Biscuits are "The Purest of all Pure Foods."

Now, isn't it as plain as day that the manufacturer of high-grade groceries is your best friend? His reputation works for you day after day—keeps on working for you even on Sundays and holidays.

HIGH STANDARD GOODS ARE THE ONLY SOURCE OF STABLE PROFITS IN THE GROCERY BUSINESS.

The superiority of Christie Biscuits is conceded—has never been seriously questioned.

You know that, your customers know it—more of them will know it. Whether your best customer wants soda biscuits, sweet or fancy biscuits, she invariably asks for Christie's.

The name is a guarantee of biscuit purity and perfection. And the fact remains that

"Christie Biscuits sell more than Biscuits."

"TO THE TRADE"

Practical reasons why you may handle "SMALL'S" Standard Maple Syrup with advantage to yourselves and satisfaction to all in preference to the many Private and Mushroom Brands on the Market.

"QUALITY"—Firstly. We give a written guarantee on every package that materials used are of the highest quality obtainable. Secondly. Claims have been established and universally accepted by Consumers, Expert Judges, and awards from nearly every important Country including the Orient, for the past 32 Years. Thirdly. Its Standard character has been maintained and verdict handed down by Judge Leet, in Canada's High Courts of Appeal as late as November 4th, 1908—

Your Syrup is Superior to anything I have seen. H. Mockford, London, Eng.
Superior to anything we have ever tasted. Milford Sipes & Co., Detroit, U.S.

Why We Want Your Business—

Your interests are best served by that firm which has proved itself progressive, up-to-date, awake to the needs of a growing country, and prepared to co-operate with you in mutually satisfactory business-building. A maker of biscuits and confectionery, especially, must keep pace with the times. He cannot exist if he does not.

Our record has been one of constantly increasing activities. We began small. Because we worked intelligently with you wide-awake dealers, we have grown. Our factory is now one of the largest of its kind in Canada. Our plant is up-to-the-minute; our goods are superior, surpassed by absolutely no other manufacturer. Our organization is complete—but we are still progressing.

We think, therefore, we are justified in stating that you should be one of our customers. Our range of high-grade chocolates, other confectionery and biscuits, is wide—no matter what your needs, we can fill your order. Every article we make is of the highest quality. We are specialists in some lines, experts in all, we sell. We have experience. Our sales record proves these statements. You will require a large assortment of biscuits and confectionery for Fall and holiday trade. Get our catalogue and prices.

Higher Prices Prevail in Fruits

Apples Are by No Means Cheap, Lemons and Oranges are Firm, Pineapples are Bringing A Good Price and Quotations Generally are Firm—Trade a Little Off Color of Late, But the Holiday Should Brighten Things—What is the Lemon Market Going to Do?—Tornado Mussed Things Up a Little in Florida.

The fruit season has about reached its normal level again, after a brisk summer trade, which, although not exactly a record breaker, was about the average. Grapes are still coming in freely, and the last shipment is not yet in sight. Pears are holding on pretty well, and are bringing a fair price. Apples are demanding attention. High prices are ruling, particularly for choice stock. The export of Canadian apples is at a low mark compared with other years, and the statement made earlier in the year to the effect that export apples would be few, is now fully verified.

It will possibly not be long until many of the fruits and vegetables will have to be imported again, and will continue to be received in that way until spring breaks again. Already, in some places, small vegetables that not long ago were produced here, are now being brought into the country. As soon as importation becomes necessary, higher prices may be looked for.

Pineapples are quoted at a rather stiff price, owing to the scarcity of Cuban stock. Valencia oranges are also firm, particularly in some brands, the end of the season causing light deliveries. The lemon situation is pointing toward high prices. Recent sales in New York have witnessed mediocre fruit sold at good prices for the reason that Sicily lemons are scarce, and the buyers needed them so badly that they were even glad to get them. The new crop is late, as has been stated in these columns before, and, in addition, it is not known when the first shipments will be made. Indications are that they will be late, owing to vessels not desiring to call at Palermo, the chief lemon port on the island. Stocks are light here, and—well the future will unfold itself in due time.

A recent tornado that swept across the lower part of Florida is said to have caused a loss of about ten per cent. of the new crops of oranges and grapefruit.

Thanksgiving and Hallowe'en coming together should bring big business to the fruitmen.

Grapes, Canadian grown, are in good demand for both preserving and table use. Although Delawares are about done, there are plenty of Rogers, Concords and Niagaras appearing. Prices are about the same.

Quebec plums are off the market, except a few scattering lots. Canadian peaches are laso done. U. S. peaches are appearing in fair quantity in the large baskets.

The pear crop appears to be good this year, both from the standpoint of quality and quantity. Business has only been fair for all lines.

Vegetables—Scarcity in some lines is beginning to make itself felt. The main ones to be affected are corn, tomatoes and cucumbers. In the last two mentioned, supplies are practically exhausted, as far as locally grown are concerned, and those now on the market are coming from across the border. Cucumbers are selling as high as $2 per doz., and tomatoes at $2.50 per box. Corn, the little that is coming in, shows a decided advance and is poor in quality even at that.

Squash are in good demand at former prices, and dealers say that there should be an advance in the next few days.

Trade in general is rather quiet at last quotations, but dealers say it is only temporary, and should be brisk in the near future.

MONTREAL.

Green Fruits—Apples are coming in freely, but as yet only in the inferior grades for local consumption. Even for export, the grade is none too good, and as a result prices are somewhat in the air at present. Quotations range about the $6 mark, but grades now appearing are hardly worth that. It is thought the next few days will bring in the better grades in fair quantity, and then matters will adjust themselves.

TORONTO.

Green Fruit—The wholesale fruit men are moving back from the exchange which they have occupied all summer. It is expected that this week will wind up the season at the general market. The lemon situation is still indefinite, and locally has a much firmer tone. The shipping conditions in Palermo are still unsettled. Vessels are not yet willing to touch at this port from which fully 90 per cent. of the Sicilan lemons used in the United States and Canada are shipped. It is believed that the total lemon stock of Toronto wholesalers at the beginning of the week was no more than two car loads. Recently in New York prices went to a high figure, as did some brands of late Valencia oranges. With the first shipment of the new Sicilian crop quite unknown, and present stocks low, the market price has become much firmer, and those who looked for high prices some time ago still hold to that opinion and look to see it verified.

Late Valencia oranges are rather scarce, and are bringing a high price. Jamaicas are also on the market and in good condtion. New Floridas have not begun to come freely yet, but should soon reach the market. New grapefruit is of good quality, although not as ripe as it might be.

Vegetables—The market has been quiet. There has been a steady demand for most vegetables, but with no special feature. Tomatoes are still received, but their heavy season is over, and the present trade is uncertain. Spanish onions are pretty well stocked by local houses. Potatoes are moving well at unchanged prices. Crop reports differ in different places. From some it is said the crop is a good one, while other reports are not so favorable. On the whole, however, it seems to be an average crop.

How to sell more Oysters

Building up a big, profitable business in oysters depends mainly on three factors :—1. Right Buying ; 2. Pushful Selling ; 3. Quality of the Oysters.

And the existence of these essential factors is also the strongest reason why you should sell

"Coast-Sealed" Oysters

Consider them one by one :

1. RIGHT BUYING—"Coast-Sealed" Oysters cost less than most lines because your order is measured up in solid oysters. A gallon of "Coast-Sealed" Oysters is composed of nothing but absolute meats.
2. PUSHFUL SELLING—The "Coast-Sealed" Oyster Display Cabinet is a great aid to pushful selling because it displays your oyster stock most attractively, and enables you to keep that stock absolutely fresh until the last pint is sold. And—this is very important—"Coast-Sealed" Cabinets are sold outright. No strings, no conditions; the "Coast-Sealed" Cabinet is your own property after you have bought it. Quality, not coercion, is what sells "Coast-Sealed" Oysters.
3. QUALITY—Without consistent good quality your oyster business cannot be truly successful. By handling "Coast-Sealed" Oysters you are absolutely certain of consistent good quality. "Coast-Sealed" Oysters are all northern grown on our own grounds in Rhode Island, Connecticut, and New York, and are all over four years old before being opened. They are fat, meaty, full-flavored oysters. They are packed—right at the sea-coast, mind you—in "Coast-Sealed" containers which are then sealed. The container reaches you with the seal unbroken and with nothing inside of it but pure, absolutely fresh oysters with the delicious salt sea flavor unimpaired.

Selling "Coast-Sealed" Oysters is the surest way to do a bumper Oyster trade.

As the season is advancing rapidly we would solicit an early enquiry.

Season for Fresh Fish Fast Closing

Demand is Still Largely Confined to Fresh Fish, but the End of the Season is in Sight—Receipts in the Interior Show Some Improvement—Market Practically Bare of Halibut, but Fresh Trout Receipts are More Liberal—Open Season for Smelts—Fresh Fish in General Coming in More Freely This Week—The Season of Advent is Not Far Distant.

The fish market is pretty active, though many lines are hard to procure. The late storms have played havoc with fisheries and threatened a famine of ground fish. Matters are improving now and it is expected that conditions will be about normal from now on.

The green cod market is a matter of much speculation just at present, and the outlook is for high prices. Still the fact must not be lost sight of that with a couple of weeks good fishing there will be a plentiful supply coming in.

Frozen fish in quantity have been moving, and are in transit already from the Pacific Coast and Great Lakes, although it is still early in the season. The reason is not far off. Owing to the shortage of fresh fish the trade had to take precautions to keep up supplies.

ONTARIO.

Toronto, Oct. 27. The fresh fish season is drawing to a close. The first of November is commonly regarded as the turning point, but trade extends considerably into the month. According to one of the trade, this week will be about mark the passing of fresh halibut. Fresh trout are coming in rather freely, and should be offered for some time yet. Finnan haddie is quoted at a slight advance, partly due to the increased demand. Oysters are moving out more freely, and prospects are brightening. It will only be a few weeks now until Advent, when the demand for fish should be appreciably increased. The retail trade should begin to prepare for the heavy season.

NEW BRUNSWICK.

St. John, Oct. 27.—The first sign of an improvement in the local fish situation came this week, when several fair shipments of haddock and cod were received. The receipts were not sufficient, however, to affect prices, which remain about the same. It is now expected that with a continuance of fine weather the situation will be much relieved, and that conditions will be about normal again. New halibut are scarce, though a few chicken halibut are being received. With the advent of colder weather the dealers will look to British Columbia for their supply. Mackerel were in fairly good supply last week, but it is hardly expected that there will be any quantity from now on, as the season is about ended.

The fresh fish for the province, up to about a month ago, was a fair average, but since that time it has been bad and dealers look for the season all round to be about equal to last year, which, however, was not a favorable season by any means.

NEWFOUNDLAND.

St. John's, Nfld., Oct. 27 — The extremely small catch during the past season is responsible of the advance in the price of Labrador fish. Supplies are not sufficient to meet the demand. Prevailing prices are—

NOVA SCOTIA.

Halifax, Oct. 27 — There is some improvement in the recipt of fresh fish on the local market this week. The stormy weather, however, has hampered the operations of the fishermen along the coasts, and the quantities of fish canned are far below the average for this season. The market is bare of fresh halibut, there being an unusual scarcity of this class of fish. There is a fairly good run of codfish, but few haddock are being caught.

The season for smelts is now open, but so far there is not any on the market. Smelts are a toothsome fish and are always in good demand.

Prince Edward Island oysters are coming in more plentifully and the price is high, $7.50 per barrel.

There is a good demand for dry and pickled fish, particularly cod and mackerel. The prices rule high and firm.

QUEBEC.

Montreal, Oct. 27—Conditions locally are improving. Reports from the coast say that the storms are over, and the dogfish pest is not so serious as during the past few weeks. Some rather large catches are reported, and orders have been booked for considerable quantities. It is to be hoped that supplies will come in freely for the next few weeks at any rate, as otherwise the winter situation would be a serious one to the trade.

Lake fish continue to come in quite freely, particularly pike and pickerel.

Prices on some grades of fresh ocean fish are lower, and supplies are coming in fairly well.

Hints on Care of Tobacco in the Store

Stock Should be Kept Under Glass so That it Will be Free From Dust—Moisture Needed, Particularly in Winter—No Necessity in Cutting Prices to Make Tobacco a Leader — The Buying of Plug Tobacco.

By H. C. M.

Grocers are only beginning to realize the possibilities for trade increase offered by cigars and tobaccos. From the standard of a profit-bringer there are few lines which offer such a margin. As a means of bringing new customers to the store, it attracts the men of the family, which practically no other section of the grocery trade does to any great extent. Tobaccos are staples, and with proper care will keep readily for any necessary length of time.

In order to fully deal with the subject, it would be necessary to do so under two separate headings—from the viewpoint of the city grocer, and from that of his country, or small town cousin. In this article we will deal only with the latter. The reason for this is obvious. In the city the tobacconist flourishes, thus making it essential that only a limited portion of the trade can be dealt with by the grocer. In a small town or village it is entirely different. The grocer has the field practically to himself. That is, he should have if he avails himself of his opportunities. Practically his only competitor is the druggist, and the natural place for cigars is not the drug store. For every-day necessities the grocer is the logical man to go to.

Why is it that tobacco in its various forms has not received its fair share of attention? There are several reasons, but the principal is stated when we say that most grocers pay little attention to this department, and know little about the care necessary to keep to stock properly.

Tobacco and cigars, when properly looked after, do not deteriorate. The observance of a few essential rules will always give the dealer good stock to work with.

Moisture is Necessary.

For instance, tobacco requires moisture always in the proper quantity. In summer nature looks after this with only moderate help. The air usually contains sufficient moisture to keep the stock in good condition.

There is one matter which has to be carefully watched, however. In the average store tobaccos are usually kept in the first place available, where they will be least in the way. This very often means that they are dumped in the first empty drawer, and usually one near the floor. As a result of this carelessness, the dust from the sweeping collects about it, not only spoiling the appearance, but seriously injuring its quality. Tobacco is sensitive to outside influences, and needs fully as much care as the grocer would devote to his finer cheese or teas.

Price-cutting Useless.

Another mistake that is common is using the tobacco department, not as one of the main profit-bringers, but as simply a leader, a drawing card at a cut price for trade in other lines. Cigars and tobaccos appeal only to the men of the family, and constitute almost the only line which does reach them. Thus the uselessness of price-cutting in this particular branch of trade is readily observed.

A proper study of trade must be made in order to stock the quality of goods that will take with customers. Often the grocer finds himself loaded up with a lot of tobaccos, good enough in all probability, but not good enough for his custom. The only remedy for this, or rather preventative, is to buy at first in small lots until he is sure just where he will land in stocking certain lines, and then go ahead.

Some Golden Rules.

In the first portion of this article some mistakes have been pointed out, but remedies have been left to the latter part. What are some of the golden rules in tobacco selling?

See that your stock is kept in glass, protected from dust and injurious outside influences.

In winter make sure that some additional moisture is left in your tobacco compartments.

Study your trade and cater to it.

Do not use tobaccos as a leader at cut prices.

Plug tobaccos should be bought in small boxes and kept fully as well protected as any other lines. The reason for the small boxes is obvious; new stock is always open.

Candy Well Displayed is Half Sold

Western Grocer Places His Show Cases near the Door and Uses Price Tickets and Salesmanship—Makes a Profit of From 25 to 50 Per Cent—Care Should be Exercised Not to Overstock as This Results in Stale Goods.

Recent years have witnessed a marked change in the character of the modern grocer's confectionery department. Formerly, the great majority of grocers sold confectionery, but in those days it was known only as candy. It was then in short dresses, so to speak, but now it has reached its majority and is designated the confectionery department as an evidence of its new dignity.

To-day, the grocer displays in handsome showcases choice chocolates, creams, milk chocolate, and other varieties of fancy chocolates and candies for all tastes.

The candy sticks and bars of former years have not at all disappeared. They occupy a position in some stores although apparently they have lost ground. But the new high-class goods have been tried by the grocer and they have proved profitable and easy to handle.

On account of the neatness of the confectionery in boxes and packages, and of the daintiness of the "sweets" that are displayed in bulk, this department possesses a particular attractiveness in those stores where it receives the attention that is its due.

The location is generally a conspicuous part of the store—because it is a profitable line—and a shopper can scarcely pass it without buying. One at least stops to let the eye feast on the dainties if the palate has to be deprived of them.

Business Expanded Quickly.

A Western Canada retailer expressing his views upon the value of a confectionery department states that he has met with splendid success. From the very first it has paid well, and it was not long until he had a regular demand and required special show cases to display them whereas previously he had only a small show case.

"While I knew," he said, "that people came into my store oftener than any confectioner's or druggist's, still I was a little doubtful at first whether they would buy in a grocery store, so my first plan was to get in only a small quantity as an experiment. I put a display in a prominent place but did not try to do any special boosting until the first Saturday when I branched out in earnest."

"There is no reason why I should have doubted these goods even from the beginning but the fact was I did not know anything whatever about them. That should not prove a deterrent for confectionery really gives little or no trouble."

Made a Good Profit.

"The profit varies from about 25 to 50 per cent. It is different with different brands. I cannot just say that it went right up to 50 per cent. but it was not far from it. There is one particular thing to be remembered in handling candy and that is to get the quality. If the quality is good the consumer is bound to like the product. After that it is smooth sailing."

"Buying candy according to my experience is to a large extent a habit especially when people get to like some special kind. But you have to begin them in that habit. It stands to reason that people will not come back for something that did not suit them the first time. Their feeling is rather that they will take good care not to go near that candy stand. That is the only method I know."

Care in Stocking.

The grocer should therefore, carefully select his stocks. When the goods are presented before him he will be able to select wisely and after that he will learn what goods he can sell best. He should make an effort to sell them combining personal salesmanship with that of a good display and with price tickets. He should aim at buying stocks that will retail at a reasonable price and still pay a good percentage of profit, and he should regulate his supply to prevent any of his goods becoming too stale.

It is the persistent advertiser that keeps the public interested in his store. The man who uses newspaper space once a month is not likely to gain many new customers through advertising. Printer's ink and white space can be made a powerful asset in a retailer's business—an investment which many find to be "worth its weight in gold." Persistency, good copy and good goods to back up the ads. are the essential points.

The Grocer will award medals for the best examples of "Constructive Salesmanship" furnished by merchants or their clerks during the next six months.

Class A.—Open to merchants or clerks in villages or towns up to 2,500 population. 1st, Solid Gold Medal; 2nd, Silver Medal; 3rd, Bronze Medal.

Class B.—Open to merchants or clerks in towns and cities between 2,500 and 20,000 population. 1st, Solid Gold Medal; 2nd, Silver Medal; 3rd, Bronze Medal.

Class C.—Open to merchants and clerks in cities over 20,000 population. 1st, Solid Gold Medal; 2nd, Silver Medal; 3rd, Bronze Medal.

The Competition will close May 1st, 1911. The decision will rest with a committee comprising the editors of nine of the Maclean trade newspapers.

The ability of a merchant to sell depends upon many things—buying methods, display, advertising in its various forms, store equipment, recommendation of goods, telephone service, etc.

Everything that has a bearing upon the building up of profitable business is "Constructive Salesmanship," for salesmanship is the essence of all business. Even buying comes under that heading, because a merchant always buys with the sale in mind.

We want actual methods by which dealers have introduced new goods, broadened the scope of demand for others, and in a general way increased their turn-over and profits by the exercise of their selling power.

No contestant will be judged on his ability to write an article about his experiences. As a matter of fact we'll be quite satisfied if merchants merely send us a rough description of the methods which they have employed. We do want all the facts—good hard facts. Where they come to us minus literary style, we'll do our best to furnish the latter.

This competition promises to be an extremely interesting one, and the beauty of it is that the small man works under no disadvantage because of his size. If he takes off his coat, studies his field and earnestly sets out to develop its possibilities, he has as good a chance of winning as the bigger fellow.

The Editor of The Grocer will be glad to hear from merchants or clerks desiring more specific information in regard to the conditions surrounding this competition.

MR. MANUFACTURER:—

You would not employ a salesman without seeing him or making a thorough investigation. Then surely you will not appoint agents to sell your goods without knowing their ability.

We have five travellers covering Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta with only the highest grocery lines. If you have goods to market in the above provinces all we ask is that you see us before arranging with some other agent who cannot secure you such profitable results.

Why is it that so many manufacturers fail to get a large connection in Western Canada, and are dissatisfied with their present agents? It is because they did not investigate more thoroughly before leaving the selling of their goods in the hands of someone that has not a well organized selling staff, or is overloaded with lines.

WE INVITE CORRESPONDENCE.

Safer and Neater Packages

BY USING THE AMERICAN Gum Tape Machine

Four machines have been found to save one clerk in a grocery store, besides saving at least two-thirds on twine. Packages thus sealed are more secure than those tied with string, are much neater and much more quickly fixed.

Many leading American firms—Marshall Field, Wanamaker, Macy, Siegel-Cooper, etc.—have found they can handle their businesses with the least possible expense by using the American Gum Tape Machine.

Printed tape—speaks your name out loud—furnished at slight additional cost. Write us for samples of tape and prices. Machine sent you for free trial if desired.

FACTS ABOUT ADVERTISING

By The Advertising Manager

VIII.

"I'll use three half-pages in The Canadian Grocer, at a cost of $37.50, and if the results are good I'll continue in that space right along," said a manufacturer to one of our representatives not long ago.

"Just what sort of results do you figure this advertising should bring you?" asked the solicitor.

"Why, inquiries about my goods," was the reply.

"Before going any further," said the solicitor, "let us look at the real nature of selling work and its relationship to advertising.

"We'll say that you want to push your —— ——"

"You have ten travelers on the road selling these goods, not to speak of the hundreds of jobbers' salesmen who handle them.

"You have the trade pretty well covered and you feel that your goods and selling facilities are quite satisfactory.

"Competition is keen and you've got to hustle for business.

"You place a half-page advertisement in The Grocer, in which you speak earnestly and enthusiastically of the quality of the goods, of the satisfaction they have given where introduced, of the worth-while profit paid the dealer.

"Now, what is the attitude of the dealer when he sees this advertisement?

"We'll say that it contains a good illustration of your package and that the typographical arrangement is neat and attractive.

"The dealer reads what you have to say about your goods and it interests him.

"You have used a good-sized space to give him your main selling arguments, and your story is told in a frank, earnest, enthusiastic way. To be brief, your advertisement gets his attention, and impresses him with the fact that behind your talk is a strong faith in the goods. He feels that such a house is likely to be a 'live wire,' and that when its salesmen calls they'll be men of the same stripe—aggressive and equipped with something worth while to tell him.

"But does this merchant rush away to write you a card or letter, inquiring for prices, etc.?

"No, he does not.

"He knows that you are not doing a mail order business.

"He knows that if you want to sell him you are going to send a traveler to call on him.

"He's as sure as he can be of anything that a salesman will call to try and sell him these goods.

"Then, why should he sit down and write to you?

"He won't buy the line anyway until the salesman arrives, and perhaps he won't then—on the first call.

"Your first advertisement gets his attention and he looks for the succeeding ones, into which you introduce new arguments, and in which the typographical arrangement is attractively varied.

"Your talks reach him, you know, at a time selected by himself to study matters connected with his business—at a time when his 'buyer's attitude' is dropped and he is willing to listen to what the firms who are trying to sell him goods have to say through the paper that has his thorough confidence.

"You may never receive a line from this dealer direct, but when your salesman arrives he gets a good hearing.

"Through your advertising you have won the dealer's attention and aroused his interest.

"Now, don't you think the salesman's work has been simplified by this favorable reception you have prepared for him?

"Don't you think he will sell a higher percentage of the dealers he calls on, than he would if this introductory work had not been done?

"Don't you think the securing of attention for your goods beforehand will save a good deal of the salesman's time—permit him to make more calls in a day than he otherwise would?

"Won't you admit that by carrying the dealer through the stages of attention and interest—always essential in the process of selling—this advertising in The Grocer has accomplished actual selling work?

"Won't—"

"You talk like a lesson in scientific salesmanship," interrupted the prospective advertiser with a smile.

"Well, doesn't all this appeal to you as common sense reasoning? Doesn't it fit in with the real nature of selling work?"

"Yes, I must admit that it does. I have never looked at the matter in just that way."

"You did not realize," went on the solicitor, "that it is the established system by which you distribute your goods that discourages inquiries on the part of dealers.

"You overlooked the fact that only one class of advertising ever brings direct sales—mail order advertising.

"The general advertising on which manufacturers spend millions in the daily newspapers and magazines never even brings inquiries, unless the public is asked to send in for a book of recipes, catalogues or samples.

"Even then the value of the advertising cannot be judged by the inquiries. As a matter of fact, they are merely incidental to the real value.

"At the same time, the results are sure and certain, the same as from advertising in The Canadian Grocer."

"Do you mean that The Grocer will not bring inquiries at all?" asked the prospective advertiser.

"Not by any means. The Grocer will, and does, bring inquiries to the advertising of some firms.

"Take an advertisement for a store fixture or appliance that can be accurately illustrated and described.

"Or take an advertisement that offers the dealer a price inducement to buy goods whose quality he is well acquainted with.

"In such instances as these The Grocer brings splendid inquiries, and often actually makes sales."

Here the solicitor turned over the pages of The Grocer and pointed to advertisers who had proved this to be so.

"A half-page every week for a year would cost me $425, would it not?" inquired the prospective advertiser.

"Yes," replied the solicitor, "and don't forget that by means of it you reach ten good buyers, for every cent expended.

"It costs you only about $8 per week to reach 7,000 of the best merchants in Canada.

"This represents a charge against each of your ten travelers' expenses of 80 cents per week.

"Not to speak of the extra sales it brings through the jobbers' salesmen."

"I'll take that half-page for the year," said the manufacturer, "and I'll clearly explain its purpose to my salesmen. Through showing them just how it performs actual selling work, by getting the dealer's attention and interest, and making their task easier, I hope to put enough additional ginger into them to make the advertising worth while for that reason alone.

"I want these advertisements to be good and I'd appreciate the assistance of one of your ad. writers."

The order was signed, the advertisement carefully written and a new advertiser made a very valuable addition to his selling staff—one in which he has every confidence, since he knows just exactly the work that it can be relied upon to accomplish.

LABORATORY OF PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT ANALYST

MONTREAL, February 22nd, 1909.

I HEREBY CERTIFY that I have drawn by my own hand ten samples of the St. Lawrence Sugar Refining Co.'s EXTRA STANDARD GRANULATED SUGAR, indiscriminately taken from four lots of about 150 bags each and six lots of about 450 bags each. I have analyzed same and find them uniformly to contain 99-99/100 to 100 per cent. of PURE CANE SUGAR, with no impurities whatever.

FACTS ABOUT ADVERTISING

By The Advertising Manager

IX.

A convention was held recently of all the salesmen for a house whose headquarters for Canada and the United States are at Toronto.

At the closing session the general manager delivered an address on "A Specialty Man's Work, and What it Embraces."

One section of that address impressed the writer particularly. It was this:—

"Did you ever wonder why merchants take special pride and interest in certain lines and not in others?

"It is not because they get an excessive profit, for fat profit to the merchant means thin value to the consumer, and that would injure his trade.

"The merchant has become enthused with the goods.

"The secret behind it is salesmanship."

And Advertising.

In discussing this point we can group the two causes that lead to the effect.

For, as we have shown in previous articles, "the relationship of advertising to salesmanship is the closest relationship known; closer than friends; closer than a team under single yoke; closer than brothers; closer than a man and wife, as there can be no separation or divorce."

Advertising and salesmanship are alike in that both are trying to influence the mind of the dealer—trying to teach him to believe in you and your goods.

The only difference is that advertising conducts a public school, while salesmanship gives individual lessons.

Let us say that a certain dealer has in stock two brands of pickles of the same quality that sell at the same price——and allow him an equal margin of profit.

One is advertised through The Canadian Grocer, and the other is not.

"Yet he bought both of them, so what difference did the advertising make?" some readers of this article will ask.

Yes, he bought both brands, and we'll allow that so far as the initial order is concerned, they are apparently on the same footing.

You will note that we emphasize the word apparently.

It must be remembered that these goods have to be sold, and repeat orders sent in again and again before final judgment can be passed.

So far as quality, price and margin of profit are concerned, neither has any advantage.

Yet in one of them the dealer takes a special pride and interest—

—he gives it the preference in display—

—he recommends it to his customers—

—he devotes liberal space to it in his local advertising—

—he hangs the store card, supplied by the manufacturer, in a prominent position, and frequently gives it a place in his window, along with the goods—

—in short, he makes this brand his leader.

Why?

Because the manufacturer has communicated to him his own faith in the goods—

—his own enthusiasm in their ability to please the most particular people—

—his own pride in the fact that they are winning a steadily expanding market.

The traveler who took the first order reflected the faith and enthusiasm of the manufacturer.

The advertising that had previously appeared in The Grocer played its part as well.

Then, week after week, all the year round, the dealer reads in this paper a series of earnest, straight-from-the-shoulder talks about this brand of pickles.

He reads them at a time selected by himself to study matters connected with the handling of pickles, and the other lines that comprise his stock.

Every advertisement carries the suggestion that this particular brand of pickles is worthy of the dealer's special attention, in display, recommendation, etc.

Each succeeding advertisement is a fresh reminder of the fact that here is a line which should have a bigger sale—

—a line that will justify the special attention the dealer is asked to give it.

The advertising never misses a week.

Every time the dealer picks up The Grocer—there it is.

The enthusiasm of it is catching.

Whenever the dealer thinks of pickles, this brand comes first to his mind.

He finds it easier to talk about to his customers than the other, because the advertising has made him familiar with the talking points.

He knows all about the special care exercised in selecting the vegetables, all about the fine quality of the vinegar, etc.

As a matter of fact, he uses this brand of pickles on his own table, and knows it to be good.

Now let us see what is the standing of the two brands that apparently started out on an equal footing.

One has satisfactory quality, price and profit.

The other has satisfactory quality, price and profit, plus the enthusiasm and salesmanship of the dealer.

Under such conditions, what relationship do you suppose the sales of the latter will bear to the former?

You don't have to puzzle over the answer.

All of which proves that the commercial value of an article properly advertised through The Canadian Grocer is greater than that of a competing line which is not, even though quality, price and profit be the same in each case.

WHY HANDLE

ST. LAWRENCE GRANULATED?

Because it is the perfection of the Refiners' science and the Boilers' art, and, being so, must necessarily give satisfaction to consumers. It is unnecessary for us to argue that it works to the Retail Merchants' advantage to give consumers the best article possible of its kind. Every Merchant knows this is so. Supplying goods that please the consumer means repeat orders and increased business. Our Granulated is made only of pure cane sugar. It contains 100% of sugar. There is no Granulated just quite as good as it on the market. Do you know that we are putting up our Extra Standard Granulated in 20-lb. cotton bags? An attractive package. Saves labor in weighing and parcelling and loss in sugar by sometimes giving overweight.

Goodwillie's Fruits in Glass

If freshly-gathered fruit stands for an extended period, or is shipped to a distance, the quality must deteriorate. The packer who wishes to put up fruits so as to retain their full, rich, natural flavor, must operate where the fruits are grown.

It is because Goodwillie's factory is located near Welland, in the heart of the Niagara fruit belt, and the fruits are bottled a few hours after being gathered, that they possess that delicious fresh fruit flavor.

Quality Meats in Glass

As a progressive retailer, you supply your customers with goods not only highest in quality, but packed in the most sanitary and approved fashion as well. POULTON & NOEL'S range of meats in glass has an established reputation for quality, and represents the last word in modern packing. The line is a large one, permitting a judicious assorted order, that will prove to your satisfaction and profit the truth of our statements.

The Trail of '98

THE MOST REALISTIC AND THRILLING CANADIAN SERIAL STORY EVER PUBLISHED

has been secured for Busy Man's Magazine, and commences with the November Number. It is from the pen of

ROBERT W. SERVICE

The Canadian Kipling, of whose Books
"The Songs of a Sourdough" and "Ballads of a Cheechako," over 100,000 copies have been sold.

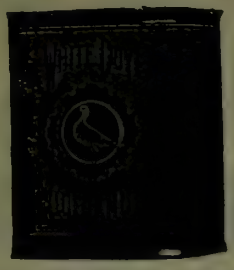
Service at one time was an obscure bank clerk in a remote corner of Canada. To-day his name is on the lips of seventy-five per cent. of the population of the Dominion, as a result of his two poems "Songs of a Sourdough" and "Ballads of a Cheechacko."

In The Trail of '98, Service drops the limitations of the poet for the time being, and tells of one of the romances of the rush to the Yukon in '98. With a bold, free pen, yet with all the skill of the poet, he unfolds his story, every line of which conveys to the reader that dramatic interest which is continually expected.



It is not a problem Novel. It has nothing to do with abstruse speculation. In its virility it seems primarily a man's book, yet it cannot fail to interest the woman who likes to hear of strong, brave men and fair women in a rugged land.

The Trail of '98 commences with the November issue. For the coming winter nights the Busy Man's reader will have in this intensely interesting story a wonderful source of refreshing entertainment.

Have your subscription commence with the November Number. Mail $2 to-day and your name will be entered on our subscription list for one year.

An auctioneer's flag waving in the breeze attracted the attention of one of our city salesmen : :

In relating the incident he said, "Entering the store, I saw fixtures, bins, counters, old shelf-worn stock, chests of tea and dusty, dirty, stale merchandise in one confused mass. The stentorian voice of the auctioneer was calling for bids. There is no use hanging around here, I thought—auction sales don't spell orders.

"A month later I saw the old familiar name on the window of a new store. Everything was new, bright and cheery, especially his pile of 'Salada.' My old friend stood behind the counter, smiling." "Well, how do you like it," he asked. "Like it," I said, "It's magnificent. How did it all come about. I didn't see you last month. I saw the auction sale. I thought you were done.

"Done ! So I was done—done with the old store—old methods—time killers—money losers. My business wasn't growing and when a business stops growing it soon stops going. I sold everything out.

"You remember I never was much of an enthusiast on 'SALADA.' I always shoved bulk tea. Well one day I saw where I was wrong. A woman asked me for 'SALADA.' I told her I had bulk tea that was 'just as good.' I spent a good deal of time persuading her to try it, going to the bin, scooping out the tea, weighing it and tying up the bag.

"I thought to myself right here is one of the places where I am losing time and losing money. I decided to change my methods—to buy in small quantities—to buy often and make quick turn-overs. You see the result. Now when a woman wants tea I hand her, quickly and promptly, a clean, neat sealed lead 'SALADA' package that I know will please her. I carry a small stock. It's always fresh. I do more business on less capital. I make quicker profits. I sell a tea the peddler can't buy. I know where I am at all the time."

Selling Power That is Undeveloped

Reducing Expense to a Minimum Availeth But Little Unless a Dealer Can Sell Goods—Interior of a Store Described Which Showed Negligence on Every Side—How Unprofitable Goods Were Discarded and Energy Put Behind Others—Influence of a Clean Store on Women.

By Henry Johnson, Jr.

Several times have I referred to my friend who has his expense-ratio down so very fine. This is the man who does business on 11 6-10 per cent. and who knows just what he is talking about when it comes to figuring expenses and profits correctly. But, my! I was sadly disappointed to note the utter want of balance in the makeup of my friend, for I found that he was neglecting every bit of his selling power. He is a case of ratios and economies gone to seed.

He does business in a good town; has the best location in that town; is on a corner from which a stage makes daily drives into the country, the town being the terminal of the railroad; yet his best word was a moan over "present conditions in the grocery business." He instanced a particular company as one of the big combinations, the formation of which was squeezing the life out of the retailer. In former days, as he truly said, 6 pieces of the article manufactured could be sold for 25 cents at a profit. Now that was impossible—5 for 25 cents was the best that could be done. This leads to the sale of single pieces, reducing the average sale and cutting the retailer's profit. And—but you know the kind of talk.

Negligence Everywhere Visible.

Meantime I was sizing up his store. From floor to ceiling one thing was written like the handwriting on the wall—NEGLECT. The floor was filthy, nothing less. I do not think it had ever been washed. It was ornamented here and there with piles of sweepings which had been taken so far and left. The counters were mussed up with miscellaneous truck originally put there "on display." The two or three old-fashioned show cases were filled with accumulated dirt and disorder. One case had a few cigars and stogies with sundry exhibits of shoe laces and odds and ends so neglected as to justify a question as to what they might be intended for.

Under one counter, open at the front, was a row of cracker tins, shoved in "any old way," with delapidadted glasses and mussed up interiors. A meagre line of very unattractive goods occupied most of the shelves; and the front portion of the most prominent shelving was filled with some cheap line of old and fly blown "prize" breakfast food, same being spread over two or three sections, apparently to fill in. On the most prominent counter rested a display bowl of some kind of pickles which was so reeking in dirt and evident corruption as to turn one's stomach.

They Get the Habit.

And this is a literally fair picture of that store, though I have no doubt my friend will hardly believe it if he shall chance to read this article; for somehow we "get the habit" in such matters, and we become so accustomed to disorderly surroundings that we no longer sense the nature of our environment. Yet this man approved of the movement to compel the display of vegetables and fruits inside of stores and off of sidewalks, though his town had not adopted that plan. In fact, he talked so intelligently on this point that I could hardly believe he could be so blind to the inside conditions in his own store, yet he most certainly was.

Almost Beyond Redemption.

I am inclined to think that this man is too old to change. It was that way with the elder Johnson, good business man though he was. He could recognize quality and value in groceries with a certainty that was almost second sight: but if mention were made of scrubbing the floor, he would be apt to smile tolerantly and maybe suggest that "the boys get those notions nowadays. In my time we kept the floor clean by wearing off the surface doing such a big business!"

But it is bad for a man to feel that any times in the past were better than these times right here now. It is surely a sign of aging and failing powers. To be and remain successful we must be quick to note the trend of the times and anticipate changes in accord with such trend.

For instance, we of Johnson & Son long ago concluded that a certain line of goods was no longer in our line, and we relegated it to the rear shelves and practically closed out our stock. A few farmers and an occasional workman calls for it and gets what he wants. As for volume of sales, however, we should not miss the business were it to stop altogether.

The Ship Was Never Clean.

Needless to say we "cleaned up." We began that work upwards of fifteen years ago; and as we continued the work, fresh dirt and disorder were revealed to us, so that one thing led to another until to-day our motto might be that of the naval officer: "The ship is never clean!" It cannot be done in a day, nor can it all be done at one time. This is an evolution, and moves accordingly. Better still, it is a business education and the course not only takes more than four years, but the answers are not all down in the book.

We did not always know what to sell for the article on which the demand was failing; but we found out. In place of the line which offered us no profit which we discarded, we pushed grape fruit. Other lines discarded have been turned into fancy candies and olive oil, for instance.

Create Demand for Other Goods.

Of course, each problem is different and peculiar to the locality. That is why the answer is not always at hand. But there is a way out of every difficulty. Better still, there is a way of turning each declining demand into a better demand for some other line.

If my friend will polish up his cash register, so it will be an ornament and not an eye-sore, and put it out into the middle of his floor where it will seem busy; and then polish up his cracker tins and paint up the counter on which they rest—after washing the counter, by the way—he will experience an increased demand for crackers at once.

Let him next—very quickly, but quietly—remove the "display" of pickles above referred to, and work up an attractive showing of these goods on a clean portion of his front counter, and he will sell more pickles of the better grades at good profits.

If he will get that stale breakfast food off his front shelves and replace it with something which looks attractive and alive, he will sell more goods in those lines; and he can feed the old food to his horses

May Turn Cheques His Way.

If he will clean up his office so a lady can lean on the desk to write a cheque without spoiling her new coat, ladies will go there to write cheques—payable to him—more often than they seem to go now. If he will do these things, and then follow other leads which these will reveal to him, he will be so busy that he will have no time to wonder what is going to happen to the grocery trade under the domination of alleged modern combines.

OFFICIAL CANNED GOODS PACK.

The official figures of the salmon pack for 1910, as compiled by the British Columbia Canners' Association, show a big gain over the pack of four years ago. Last year was the "big year," there being a great run of salmon every four years, but this year's showing is remarkably good, much in excess of what the canners expected. The figures for the 1910 pack are as follows: Fraser River, 203,957 cases; Skeena River, 226,429; Rivers Inlet, 129,847; Naas River, 40,458; outlying canneries, 137,794; a grand total of 783,485 cases.

The death of J. B. A. Martin, an ex-alderman, and for many years a member of the Montreal firm of Laporte, Martin & Co., occurred in Montreal, October 19th.

Preparations for the Winter Trade

Details That are Necessary to Make the Most of the Coming Season—Special Work Should be Directed Towards Christmas Goods—Suggestions for a Publicity Campaign—Looking in Advance to Easter.

By N. A. Armstrong.

With the beginning of winter now well in sight the careful retailer must begin to think, if he has not already done so, about preparing for his Christmas business. Not only that but there are many lines, quiet through the summer, that are popular throughout the cold season. Of course past experience is the surest teacher in such matters but at the same time there is always something to be learned from men who have already had that experience and applied it to their profit.

Talking the matter over with some representative Montreal retailers several outlines as to fall preparations were given which should be a help in systematizing fall buying.

Check Over Stock.

A general checking up of stock—not necessarily an inventory—is the first thing in order at this season. Therefore, the first step is to see that your stock of poultry is arranged for well in advance, that your stock of cranberries is ample, and that you advertise the fact in your local papers, by window displays, or any or all of the recognized methods of acquainting your trade with the facts.

Proper Time to Work.

There is a psychological moment when judicious advertising will catch the Christmas trade. Only careful observation will enable one to judge just when this is. Then push business for all there is in it. Half hearted measures will not obtain the additional trade. Aggressive campaigning for business is becoming more and more of a necessity. This might be crystallized into three maxims. First, have the goods. Second, tell the people at the proper time, and tell them hard. Third, see that you are never behind your competitor in doing so. A shade in front is the proper place, not too far ahead in your announcements, or they will lose some of their effect through lack of timeliness. In some sections buying is done earlier than in others hence the impossibility of giving any exact date. A close watch on local conversation will soon tell the grocer when people are beginning to plan for Thanksgiving.

General Winter Preparations.

Between Thanksgiving and Christmas is a short breathing space, during which time the winter staples, all that have not already been stocked, can be looked after. Some of the peculiarly cold weather goods are canned pork and beans, beans, rice, nuts, dried fruits, barrelled fruits, cranberries, tapioca, and molasses.

Of course this list is far from complete, but there is a common fact about nearly all of them. They are the rich, heat-producing articles. With these qualities in mind it is not a hard matter to check up your stock and see what is lacking.

Advertising for Winter.

What should be advertised in winter? Nothing is easier to answer than this question and yet look over your ads. of the winter previous and see how much space has been wasted on goods which are not, and probably never will be in much demand through the cold weather.

In the first place the advertising might be divided under two main headings, seasonable advertising, specialties for Christmas, etc., and regular advertising. Under the first head come naturally all the extras in vogue at festival times, such as the turkey and cranberry sauce. These should be featured daily during the time of greatest popularity.

Under the heading of regular comes the placing before your buyers of lines they must have at all times during the winter. As this list is large there are almost infinite possibilities for variety, both in window and store display, and in newspaper publicity. Just here it may be said that too much stress cannot be laid upon advertising co-operation. Display the goods in your windows that you tell your customers about by other methods. Systematize your advertising, making the various branches all work in harmony.

If you say in the newspaper that an especially fine lot of olives have arrived do not make an oatmeal display in your window. That is a mistake very often made, grocers seeming to think that as many lines as possible should be featured. One feature, and be sure to make it an attractive one, will make more trade than a scattering of half a dozen different ones. In this regard, however, care should be taken to make changes frequently. The oftener the better. Possible customers lose interest if one line is shown too long. Variety is always attractive, but make this variety show one line at a time and many to the month.

Look After Perishables.

There are many lines in every grocery which are susceptible to outside influences. For instance, butter, eggs, apples and cheese. Are your storage plans equal to looking after them properly? A loss of a barrel of apples or a few pounds of butter will knock the profits down rapidly. With modern knowledge on the subject of proper storage, there should be little difficulty in keeping winter perishables properly. Potatoes will freeze if left exposed in our climate, and will sprout if left in a damp place.

Just here it seems a good place to give a simple method of preventing the latter. Make a strong solution of ordinary salt in a tub. Use an old wicker or wire basket and immerse the potatoes for a minute or two in the brine. With ordinary conditions the potatoes will not sprout.

The Christmas Trade.

The grocers' harvest is before and during the Christmas season. Preparations should be made well in advance for remember, it is the jobers' busy time as well, and "rush" orders even are not always delivered when their non-arrival means the loss of sales to the grocer.

If a line is running short, steps should be instantly taken to see that it is replenished in time. If customers cannot get what they want from you, they do not wait long at a time of year when everything is done in a rush. It may cost you your customer eventually, if satisfactory treatment is found elsewhere.

Provision for extra help should be made early, and also an advertising campaign laid out. Nothing should be left to chance at this, the most important time of the year to the grocer. Christmas is a time of free buying. Luxuries and expensive lines are used more generally than at any other time. System in a grocery is never more apparent, either for its presence or its absence as at this season.

Looking Still Further Ahead.

Easter is a long way ahead but still it is another important season to the grocer. Eggs, are of course, the feature of all Easter displays. Preparations away ahead are necessary to be sure of your supply. A shortage simply means so many dollars out of your pocket and into your competitor's.

Attractive egg displays can be made cheaply, owing to the colored egg desire at that time of year. A few dyes and a little thought will go far toward the making of attractive windows at this season.

Practical Methods in Retail Stores

Making Use of Readers in New Brunswick Newspapers—Wall Paper and Hunting Season Window Dressing—Vegetable Display for Thanksgiving—Special Confectionery Counter for Christmas—Toronto Grocers Invest in Handsome Display Baskets.

N. B. Grocers Using Readers.

Sackville, N.B., Nov. 3.—It is apparent from a perusal of the Maritime newspapers that the grocers down this way have awakened to the value of newspaper publicity. In addition to carrying larger space in the regular advertising columns of their local papers they are using a lot of readers in the local columns. The following were taken from a Sackville paper:

"The grocer who is most anxious to "make good"—to replace every unsatisfactory thing that goes to a patron, if the complaint has one per cent. of reason in it—ought to have your trade—oughtn't he? Call and see Burwash Robinson, Middle Sackville."

"When a new idea in food comes along—and is a good one—you'll find the store of the Sackville Hay & Feed Company bringing it to you while it's new. They'll keep you up-to-date."

"If you wouldn't invite your friends to a 'cheap' restaurant, why should you entertain them with table food at your home which comes from a 'cheap' grocery? The answer is: You shouldn't. Buy your groceries from J. E. Hickey."

While these serve to draw attention to the stores, they would probably be productive of much better results if the advertisers made mention of some special line, naming the goods and the price. Instead of directing attention in a general way, they would then impress on the reader that so and so was selling a certain line at a certain price. Of course, the price should be attractive enough to ensure the interest of the householder who reads.

Dressing Wall Paper Windows.

Toronto, Nov. 3.—Wall paper windows ought to be given some attention by those general merchants who handle wall paper. The large stores are making this department prominent by constant display space.

A recent instance of this was given by one of the large Toronto department stores, and the window attracted much attention. The arrangement was something like this: Three or four stands of about seven feet high were used at the back of the window on which the paper was laid down flat from top to bottom. On one side of the stand was draped a piece of silk or material appropriate to the paper used, and by gathering this material in at the top of the stand and falling to the floor, it produced the required effect.

Trimmed a Hunter's Window.

Midland, Ont., Nov. 3.—The window of J. B. Horrell & Son's grocery department was recently trimmed to call attention to the hunting season.

In two corners of the window were evergreen trees, between which were situated the tent and cooking utensils. Over wood ready to light was hung the iron pot used for boiling water, potatoes, etc., while to one side was the hunter's larder, and standing up against the tree a number of rifles. Tobacco and pipes were also in evidence upon a table and ready for use after the day's hunt when the men sit around the fireside and tell yarns of by-gone experiences on the hunting grounds. Autumn leaves formed a part of the scene, indicating that Jack Frost has been at work, and winter is drawing near.

To Protect the Valuables.

Chatham, N.B., Nov. 3.—W. S. Loggie & Co., of Chatham, have installed in the rear of their grocery department a large vault, two storeys high, 8x11 feet outside, and 5x8 feet inside. The lower vault is six feet high and the upper one nine feet high. The construction is brick and concrete, with an air space between the inner and outer walls, and so arranged that a stream of water will pass between the two. It is designed to take care of the cash and valuables of the firm.

Thanksgiving Vegetable Display.

Chatham, Ont., Nov. 3.—A window display devoted to Thanksgiving vegetables was arranged last week in S. Bullis' grocery.

The bottom of the window, in the foreground, was filled with cranberries. Behind these, vegetables of various kinds, including tomatoes, onions, cauliflower, cabbage, potatoes, turnips, carrots and squash, were banked. In the rear, on a sort of shelf, were shown two prize pumpkins, each well over 50 pounds in weight. The disp'ay was helped out by small sheaves of wheat at the corners, as well as a few wheat straws in the foreground.

Bought Fancy Display Baskets.

Toronto, Nov. 3.—Some of the members of the Toronto R. G. A. recently took a pleasure trip to New York, and while there incidentally picked up some new ideas. W. C. Miller, David Bell and D. W. Clark purchased a number of fancy baskets, which they will use for disp'aying fruit, such as oranges, lemons, Malaga raisins, etc. The baskets have been made in the shape of automobiles, boats, vehicles, etc., and will certainly show off the displays to perfection.

Moving Barrel Was Used.

Bracebridge, Ont., Nov. 3.—The grocers here did credit to themselves in window decorations for Thanksgiving. One row of windows that attracted much attention was that of Kirk Bros. The main window showed a foundation of apples, and above was placed a swinging barrel, decorated with large, rosy snow apples, with an electric attachment that kept it in motion, like the pendulum of a clock.

This idea might be worked out in a Christmas window.

OUGHT TO BE EVERYDAY METHODS.

F. & J. Morley, of Sydney, N. S., are strong believers in the power of salesmanship to sell goods not actually demanded. One of their methods is to have an order-taker talk up something special while he is out for the regular orders of his customers, who do not come to the store. This has been used with splendid results.

The members of this firm are warm supporters of salesmanship in its various phases, as a means of selling extra goods.

In speaking of it to The Grocer they say: "We appreciate very much your efforts in getting down to bed rock in the business methods of the grocers of Canada.

"While we have some good methods in use, yet we must admit in our own case that most of these ventures are largely hap-hazard when they should be our every-day methods.

"We feel that The Canadian Grocer will have done us, as well as the other grocers of the Dominion, a very great service if you can from time to time stimulate us to become sa'esmen who will be able to create demand for goods as well as supply them."

Big Friday Oyster Trade.

Hamilton, Ont., Nov. 3.—A special effort to sell oysters is made by one of our local grocers every Friday. While he never misses a chance to increase his business in this regard, still his Friday method is of special nature. He calls attention to oysters on a blackboard in front of the store, and sometimes he devotes newspaper space to it, and now and then he arranges a window of the paper containers in which the goods are delivered to customers.

He tries to combine selling, his forces concentrating for that day upon oysters. By neglecting this method once he discovered a falling off in sales, and therefore that his customers had to be educated to buying oysters. He adopted this idea about two years ago, and has found it to work satisfactorily.

Winter's Potato Supplies.

Brantford, Ont., Nov. 3.—A local grocer in boosting his potato orders offered special inducements to those who will buy their supply for the winter in one order. He has received a good supply of potatoes, and is in touch with the farmers, who can forward him as many loads as he requires.

He promises an inducement to those who buy in quantities, and the idea is to sell a whole winter's supply. The plan is partly intended as an advertising idea, for he announces it on a store blackboard. He began this method several years ago and now has it working like a system.

Created Demand for Pickles.

Toronto, Nov. 3.—R. Bell, a Yonge St. grocer, Toronto, is a firm believer in the value of salesmanship in his store. Although only a young man, and therefore not long a proprietor, he has had a number of experiences which have satisfied him that for the most part, his customers depend upon his advice regarding goods, and it remains almost entirely with himself whether he shall handle a certain line of goods or not.

One particular example was that of a particular brand of pickle. A wholesaler asked him to stock it, but the proposition at first did not look good, because of the fact that he had had no demand for them. Finally an agreement was made in which Mr. Bell took no responsibility, the wholesaler accepting it on account of the fact that he was trying to introduce the goods.

Mr. Bell first tried them himself, and afterwards he put his own ability as a salesman behind them. To-day they are the best selling pickle in his store, and the people in the district are now well acquainted with them. He asserts that the sale he has built up was largely due to the quality of the pickles, and all he had to do was to make the first sales. After that it was comparatively easy sailing.

Special Counter for Xmas Sweets.

Peterboro, Nov. 3.—During the rush season around Christmas time, R. C. Braund, a local merchant, prepares a special counter of candies, nuts and fruit, and secures a young girl to look after the sales. He has carried the idea out on a fairly large scale, having all kinds of nuts and candies that are asked for in the Christmas season. Fancy chocolates in boxes, cream and other kinds of candy are included. Oranges, dates, figs and other fruits are also shown.

Under the care of a smart girl this booth has proved successful. A prominent part of the store was set apart for it, and one of the reasons of its success was the fact that it was out of the ordinary. More attention was paid to the season's dainties because Mr. Braund gave them more prominence, and felt that the demand for these goods at that time of the year warranted a method that was out of the ordinary.

INCREASED SELLING POWER.

As our readers all know, the special number issued last week featured "The Selling Power of the Dealer." In it were given particular instances showing how dealers in various parts of the country have realized their selling possibilities and utilized, with good results, personal salesmanship as well as other selling forces at their command.

In view of the interest it has already aroused, it was our intention to publish regularly a department dealing solely with this phase of the retailer's business. But on second thought, since everything a merchant does tends to either increase or decrease his selling power, therefore practically every article will bear on this important question.

We believe that the aim of every retail merchant ought to be directed along the lines of increased selling power and trust that all will co-operate with us in presenting the possibilities that are available to bring about such a result.

THE AGREEMENT-BREAKER.

Some time ago nearly all the grocers on Roncesvalles Avenue, Toronto, signed a petition to close their stores at seven o'clock, but it held only for a few days. Now there is a good deal of talk about those who first broke the agreement, and, of course, each one is innocent and the other fellow is guilty.

The Canadian Grocer has many times shown that where early closing has been given a fair trial it has met with such favor that the merchants would under no consideration go back to late hours, evenings of drudgery, no time with the family, big expense with fuel and light, and the meagre transactions that usually take place after the hour of 7 o'clock.

An instance of this was shown in the special number of last week. A retail dealer pointed out that early closing changed the grocery business from a drudgery to a joy, so far as he was concerned, and he gave it his unqualified endorsation.

The first great difficulty is getting unity among those concerned. When once this has been brought about each must be careful not to break his agreement; he must not worry over the business when the store is locked, nor trouble himself about alleged trade that is being lost. Let him enjoy life the remainder of the day as he pleases, for he deserves these few hours of freedom.

If the man who breaks the agreement could—as the bard Burns would put it—see himself as others see him, he would think twice before he acted.

FLOUR EXPORTS INCREASING.

For the nine months ending Sept. 30, 1908, Great Britain imported from Canada 993,228 cwt. of flour; for the same period in 1909 the quantity was 1,282,300 cwt., and in 1910 it was 1,980,586 cwt.

This illustrates that Canada is forging ahead rapidly in her exports of flour to Great Britain. On the other hand, United States is falling behind, the quantity in 1910 being more than a million cwt. below 1909, and about four million cwt. below 1908.

HOG PRODUCTS DECLINING.

A study of the provision market just now ought to be made by every dealer. So far as hog products are concerned it will be observed that the market is sagging.

During the past month the price of live hogs has declined in Toronto $2.35 per cwt. At the beginning of October it was $9.25; now it is $6.90. This is due to increased receipts, and has had the effect of lowering the prices of bacon, ham and lard. This week lard declined a quarter of a cent; bacon is down a cent, and hams about half a cent. The whole tone of the market is downward and buying in the near future should be carefully done.

The receipts of butter and cheese are much larger than last year, but it is different with fresh eggs, which are gradually becoming scarcer and higher in price.

COURTESY IS REPAID.

Courtesy is a great selling factor. In the modern merchandising, the man who takes this means of pleasing his customers is banking on a sure thing.

There are numerous instances which prove, that exercised in the most ordinary way, this quality always repays in kind. The merchant who on a rainy day loaned his customer a brand new rain coat in order to enable her to reach home, not only made a sale of that coat the next day, but also put that customer in a most friendly attitude towards his store. Every day multiplies instances of this kind.

PREPARE FOR CHRISTMAS TRADE.

While many grocers have already begun their preparations for the Christmas season, yet there are some who believe in letting it take care of itself to a considerable extent, buying as they need articles, and then they wonder why it is their competitor seems to be doing such a rushing trade.

Why is it? The answer is simple. People have found that he is the man who is prepared to give them immediately all the lines they need at this festive season, and that the other man may have to put them off until he can lay in a supply. That is not good business—to put off a customer who wants an article for a certain purpose at an early date. It is a simple matter to lay plans for trade. Only certain articles are in especial demand at that time. Turkey, with its garnishings such as cranberries, choice dried fruits, peels, nuts, oranges, etc., go to make up a list that every grocer should be familiar with.

The only mistake that is made is in not being beforehand. See that you are not making this mistake.

FORGOT ABOUT GOODS STOCKED.

The representative of a manufacturing firm tells a story of a grocer with whom he left a case of goods, with the understanding that the grocer would display them and make some effort to sell them.

The traveler on his second trip found that the grocer apparently had forgotten him, as he did not see any on the shelves. However, he hoped that the goods had been sold, so he said: "Well, how has ——— been selling?"

The grocer looked puzzled. He seemed to recall the name, but he was not sure of the nature of the article. The traveler explained its nature, and the grocer scratched his head in an endeavor to collect his thoughts. Finally he called to his clerk.

"Where is that box of ———?" he asked.

But the clerk did not even know that the goods had ever been in the store. Finally the grocer began to search under the counters and found the box just as he had left it on the traveler's previous visit. The grocer had put it under the counter, probably with the intention of doing something in the future, but it soon became lost in his memory, with other ideas. Nobody had asked for it and he did not use his selling power.

Goods that are to sell should be displayed and talked up to customers. In fact, the more goods displayed and the more neatly are they aranged, the greater number of sales may be expected. Imagine the traveler's feelings when he found his goods untouched.

CUTTING OFF CASH DISCOUNTS.

One of the causes why cash discounts are allowed so sparingly by manufacturers and wholesalers, is the abuse which has been made of them by wholesalers and retailers in the past.

For instance if 10 days were allowed on an account the wholesaler and retailer would frequently demand the discount should the account not be paid for 20 days; if 30 days were the limit they would want the discount in 60 and even 90 days and so on. The threat was used that if it were not forthcoming they knew where they could get it.

Just now the New York Wholesale Grocers' Association is taking up this question, its secretary having recently sent out a sharp letter to the members criticizing severely the action of those who make such demands. The letter was as follows:

"From efforts made by this office in regard to obtaining better discounts from the manufacturer to the jobber we are inclined to believe that more liberal discounts are frequently withheld by manufacturers on account of the inconsistency of some jobbers failing to appreciate the fact that ten days does not mean anywhere from fifteen to thirty days.

"Cash discounts are given by the manufacturer for the special inducement of payment in ten days, and the jobber is no more justified in deducting the cash discount after the ten days have passed than the manufacturer would be in retaining two per cent. of the goods after the bill had been rendered.

"A square deal between the manufacturer and the jobber is necessary if business is to be conducted on legitimate lines, and we feel every wholesale grocer will assist this office in its efforts to accomplish beneficial results."

A LACK OF JUDGMENT.

When a merchant admits he cannot compete with a mail order house, he commits a serious breach of trade etiquette.

Not very long ago a grocer was heard to say, in a bitter, grumbling tone, with two or three customers in the store, that he didn't understand how it should be, but he could not sell as cheaply as ———'s, naming a large departmental store in his city.

Who will deny that such a statement was a strong advertising talk for the big store? As a matter of fact, he was selling the bulk of his goods as cheaply as the departmental store. But he had just noticed in an advertisement that the price of a particular article was cut by his competitor, causing him to give vent to his injured feelings, and leading his customers to believe he was overcharging them.

This is an example of lack of judgment. He might have said that the department store was cutting prices in a few cases, but that this was one of its methods to attract trade; that it made big profits on the goods sold through getting people into the store; that it demanded cash in every case; that it does not give the personal attention supplied by the retail dealer, etc.

That was left unsaid, and the very thing that shouldn't have been said was said. It diminished that dealer's selling power.

Judgment is a necessary attribute in the retailer's business.

EDISON'S NEW INVENTION.

Thomas Edison recently made the statement that the time would come when stores would be reduced to slot machines, thereby the purchaser would simply have to drop a coin in a slot, turn a handle or press a button and he would receive his money's worth of the goods behind that slot.

On account of Edison's prominence as an inventor, this story has spread widely, and even has been reproduced in English journals. Recently in reply to a letter on this point, he said: "My plan is only a scheme for selling coal and bare necessities of life to the poor in the slums, so that they will get their nickel's worth of coal, etc., at the carload price plus enough to cover rent, attendance and repairs."

Those who read the first story and were acquainted with the conditions of the grocery business, referring to it in particular, felt that the idea was a far cry into the future. In the grocery store the most important feature is not the stock or the fixtures, but the grocer himself, and he is beginning to realize this fact more and more.

Not only that, but there are those, too, who are beginning to be impressed with this fact, although they have not admitted it in the past. Stranger things than that which Edison speaks of have come to pass, but the grocery store without the personality of the dealer does not seem a possibility in present-day life. It cannot be expected for several generations, at any rate.

KEEP THE WINDOWS LIGHTED.

Now that the days are growing shorter the question of lighting the show windows again becomes an important question.

In a city of about 15,000 population, one evening recently, The Canadian Grocer noticed that many of the windows of grocery stores were dark. At first thought we concluded that there must be something wrong with the incandescent circuit, but we were informed that it would be very unusual if the store fronts were illuminated.

The retailers of the city in question are leaving idle one of the best and cheapest advertising mediums that is open to them. There, as everywhere else, many people pass down the streets in the evening and, if given an opportunity, the ladies would look for interesting offerings in the windows. They have more leisure then to do so than during the day.

In this connection we might mention the experience of a Montreal trimmer. As an experiment he put in a display Saturday evening, of goods to be sold Monday morning at eight o'clock. The plan was so successful that he continued it for some time. The windows sold the goods without any other advertising.

THE MERCHANT LOSES.

In a case tried at Toronto recently a collector for a weekly payment merchant was freed because he was charged with stealing money from customers, which sums he failed to turn over to his employer.

H. C. Macdonald, the prisoner's lawyer, said: "I submit there is no case to go to a jury. The evidence put in only shows that this man had collected certain sums of money from these witnesses. That was his duty. He was paid for it. He was hired by his company to collect those sums. He cannot be found guilty of stealing money from these people." "That is so," said Judge Denton. "He did not steel any money from these people. The Crown has no case, and the jury will bring in a verdict of not guilty."

The point is an interesting one as it incidentally decides who is the loser of the moneys misappropriated by the collector. The customers having paid to a duly accredited representative of the merchant, are freed from further responsibility and the loss must be sustained by the merchant.

Manufacturers and jobbers of Chicago are arranging for a conference at which trade questions will be discussed. It is expected that the questions of "manufacturing jobber" and "direct selling" will be taken up.

Year's Imports of Sugar Into Canada

Some Interesting Figures Which Indicate Gradual Advance of Sugar Consumption in This Country—For Year Ending March 31, 1910, it was More Than 16,000,000 lbs., or 8,000 Tons Ahead of Previous Twelve Months—Our Sources of Supply.

Sugar statistics showing the imports into Canada during the year ending March 31, and comparisons made with previous years, bring out some interesting facts. They tell of the sources of sugar coming into Canada, the quantity from each country under the different tariffs, and indicate the gradual advance in consumption during the past ten years.

A resume of the latter shows that for the year ending March 31, 1910, the sugar entered amounted to 497,788,481 lbs. Figures for the preceding year were 481,540,640, a difference of more than 16,000,000 lbs. The increase over 1908 amounted to more than 30,000,000 lbs., and over 1901—ten years ago—over 161,000,000 lbs. The only year during the ten to show a decline from the preceding was 1905, the figures being 346,752,598 lbs., as compared with 390,544,660 lbs. of the year before.

Out of the 497,788,481 lbs. mentioned above 153,855,545 were entered under the general tariff, and 343,932 936 under the preferential tariff. No sugar has come in under the surtax tariff since 1907, when for nine months up to March 31, the amount was 3,784 lbs. This was the time when the fiscal year was changed from June 30 to March 31.

The figures for 1910 also point out that the imports of sugars into Canada above 16 Dutch Standard, under both the general and preferential tariffs, amounted to 35,484,778 lbs.; those not above 16 Dutch Standard amounted to 409 081,796 lbs. Considering a population of 7,000,000 in Canada, the amount per capita would reach 71 lbs.

The tables shown herewith, compiled by Wallace Anderson, give the figures on imports from the different countries.

TO CAUSE LARGE CONSUMPTION.

Enough Surplus in Sugar to Result in Low Prices, Say Willet & Gray.

The new cane and beet sugar crops of the world give promise of an enormous total yield, estimated to outturn possibly 1,755,813 tons more than those of last season. This, at any rate, is the opinion of Willett & Gray. They say further: "In the 1909-10 campaign the production was in tons:—Cane, 8,302,592; European beet, 6,138,000, and American beet, 450,595; total 14,891,187, while for the new season (1910-11) the estimates are:—Cane, 8,502,000; European beet, 7,700,000, and American beet, 445,000; total, 16,647,000 tons.

"It is interesting to note that last season the cane sugar crops of the world amounted to 1,713,997 tons more than the beet sugar production, but the prospects are that next season the cane crops will prove to be only 357,000 tons larger than the beet crops.

Last year at this time they estimated that the stock in principal countries would be reduced to less than 991,543 tons (stock Sept. 1, 1909) at the end of the campaign unless consumption was checked by high prices; as it turns out, the year closed (September 1, 1910), with stock of 1,086,403 tons, the high prices which ruled having unquestionably caused the consumption to be curtailed.

Part of the expected increased production will be needed to fill depleted invisible stocks, but the indications are that there will be enough surplus to cause low prices, which will induce a large increase in consumption the world over."

A Philadelphia retailer was recently fined $200 for a breach of the Pure Food law. He sold eggs which were adjuged unfit for food. In other words they were "rotten."

How B.C. Association Watches Credits

Constitution of the Grocers' Association in Vancouver—Terms Under Which Members are Admitted—Card Used on Which Applicants for Credit are Rated—The Questions Asked and Information Desired.

Since so many retailers are interested in association work, constitutions of associations already formed ought to be read with interest and profit. The following is taken from the constitution of the Vancouver, B.C., Retail Grocers' Association, and contains special information on how credits are looked after:

"In order to foster and maintain a permanent social feeling among the retail grocers of Vancouver; to obliterate distrust and inspire confidence among the members of the trade; to correct excessive and unmercantile competition; to remove by concert such evils and customs as are against good policy and sound business principle—whether it be cutting of prices, selling of the wholesale house at retail, improper house to house peddling, the distribution and consumption of adulterated and unwholesome goods, the use of fictitious labels, the use of dishonest weights and measures, or whatsoever the evil may be; to disseminate useful information; to watch and influence legislation towards the better protection of our capital; to assist our members in collecting delinquent accounts; to encourage the observance of the Sabbath and all legal holidays and to obtain results which experience have proved are not attainable by individual or divided effort; for these reasons we hereby resolve ourselves into an organization to be known as the Vancouver Retail Grocers' Association."

Admission of Members.

The regulation regarding membership and dues reads as follows:

"Any person dealing in groceries in the retail business is eligible for membership and entitled to the protection and privileges of the association.

"A person having applied for membership in this association shall, if there be no objection, have his name placed upon the roll at once; but if there shall be an objection to him, the members shall proceed to ballot, and should there be five negative votes cast the applicant shall be declared not elected.

"All firms applying for membership in this association must deposit with the treasurer an admission fee of:

Class A	$50.00
Class B	75 00
Class C	100.00

To take the form of a demand note payable to the treasurer, a receipt for which shall be given by the secretary.

"The executive shall decide as to what class the applicant belongs.

"The admission fee to be considered as a deposit and held in trust by the treasurer as a guarantee of good faith.

"The dues of members shall be due and payable on the first day of each month.

"The dues of this association shall be $2 per month."

When Credit is Asked For.

The association supplies members with cards, which are to be used for the purpose of recording the statements of customers desiring to secure credit. The card, which is about the size of an ordinary post card, reads as follows:

"For the purpose of obtaining credit I make the following declaration:

My full name is .....
Present address, No. .....
Tenant or Owner? .....
My (husband's) present occupation is .....
Where employed .....
I will pay on ..... day of each .....
Amount of credit wanted .....
At what grocery did you last trade on credit .....
.....
Give other references .....
.....
I do not owe any past due accounts to any other merchant.

Signed .....

"No honest person will be offended at any reasonable precautions in the extending of credit. The above questions are only fair and reasonable."

Reports are later submitted to the secretary of the association, and in this way a statement is at all times available regarding those who have applied to any member of the association for credit. It is scarcely necessary to remark that this information is only given to those who are members in good standing.

Instructions re Rating.

Special instructions have been issued regarding the making out of reports to be submitted to the secretary. They read, in part, as follows:

"With every name be sure to state customer's occupation, such as banker, lawyer, dentist, merchant, mechanic, carpenter, contractor, mason laborer, clerk, salesman, etc.

"Accompanying employe's occupation if possible, state by whom employed.

"Under general habits, state if customer is lazy, uses intoxicants, gambles or has any other habits that tend to make applicant unsafe risk.

"We especially urge the exercise of careful judgment when rating customers in order to avoid injury to customers or merchants. (Do unto others as you would have others do unto you.)

"Rate your credit customers entirely according to your honest experience, independent of all others.

"Allow only a trusted and experienced employe to prepare credit rating report, and positively forbid all others access to your credit rating paraphernalia.

"As far as you know, please note at bottom of your report any change of address of your customers, especially such as have moved away from the city. Give post office address if possible."

PRICE OF COFFEE KEPT UP.

Brazil Government Bought in Surplus Four Years Ago to Await the Lean Years.

Within eighteen months the price of coffee in the primary market has advanced seventy per cent. Four years ago the coffee growers of Brazil were in a fair way to ruin themselves by overproduction. The yield of their plantations outran the world's demand. It is a deplorable economic fact, as one writer puts it, that the world will reward you with affluence for producing less than it wants of a given article, but break you for producing more than it wants. The price of coffee sank to a point that brought loss to the growers.

To save the industry, Brazil borrowed seventy-five million dollars for the purpose of buying up coffee and holding it off the market until the price should advance to a given figure; also it forbade the planting of more coffee trees. For a good while it looked as if the load would be too heavy for the government to carry and that the novel plan would fail. But on account of a light crop last year and increased consumption, it now seems likely to succeed in its main object of restoring prosperity to the coffee growers by getting higher prices..

The greatest advances in coffee have been in Rios and Santos which are used very largely in the United States. Prominent Canadian coffee men assert that these coffees are not extensively consumed in Canada. They say they are not the coffees demanded by the high-class Canadian trade. The increased prices of Rios and Santos have affected the prices of other coffees, with the result that there is a general firmness.

INFORMATION FOR BUYERS.

Supplied to the Trade by Sellers.

King Oscar sardines, as well as other products of the manufacturers, Chr. Bjelland & Co., Stavanger, Norway, received the Grand Prix (first prize) at the International Exhibition at Brussels. This makes a total of seven first prizes, twenty gold medals and six diplomas of honor awarded to this company, which briefly illustrates the superior quality of their goods. Jno. W. Bickle & Greening, Hamilton, Ont., are their agents.

E. C. Phipps, of White Swan Spices and Cereals, Toronto, was in Winnipeg recently, looking over the territory with the local representative, W. H. Escott.

"Now, Johnny," said the teacher, "if your mother bought three baskets of grapes, the dealer's price being 25 cents a basket, how much would she pay for the entire lot?"

"Nobody couldn't tell," answered Johnny. "Ma's a wonder when it comes to beating them hucksters down."

QUEBEC MARKETS

POINTERS—

Sugar—Weak at the decline.

Tapioca—½c advance.

Shelled Walnuts—Higher in the primary markets.

Montreal, Nov. 3.—With two holidays in the week, coming on two consecutive days, Thanksgiving and All Saints' day, the trade has hardly been able to show what the normal tone of business is. Still all report a good pre-Thanksgiving trade, and the retailers report that buying of luxuries was more prevalent than for some years past. Even their general trade was a decided improvement on last year.

The sugar situation remains the same, with one refinery 5c below the other, and a weak raw market. It seems to be a certainty that there will be lower levels reached. New York is now down to $4.60, and the fear of a United States invasion will make the local refiners careful not to give them a foothold.

Coffee is in much the same situation as last week. There is a slightly weaker tone showing, and it may be that the market will take a break. There is no reason in present prices, except manipulation, as stocks are ample to supply the world for a year, even should the Brazil crop prove an entire failure.

Collections locally are improving, and trade generally is satisfactory, and what is more, is on a rising market in nearly all lines.

Sugar—The present sugar situation in this city is somewhat peculiar. One refinery continues to quote 5c higher than the other. The raw market continues weak, though there has been a temporary recovery to a slight degree. Another decline is prophecied, but not until the arrival of some of the cheaper raws, now in transit. As none of the cheap grades have as yet arrived, the meltings at present are of high-priced sugars purchased earlier in the season.

Syrups and Molasses—Country demand for molasses is on the increase at last, and if the weather continues as cool as at present, it will stimulate this end of the trade materially. Syrups are holding their former demand well indeed, and prices in both remain firm.

Tea—Two holidays this week has made it a comparatively quiet one. Still Japans of the medium grades have been selling fairly well. The market for Ceylons has been holding its own fairly. Chinas are very slow.

Coffee—The coffee situation is weakening a little, according to the trade, but as yet there has not been any material change, except in the tone of the market. Evidently the speculators have either succeeded in disposing of a good deal of their surplus or have failed to do so, in either event the effect would be the same, weaker market.

Spices—Winter demand for the Christmas season is now beginning to be felt, and there is a brisk trade passing for all lines of spices. The pickling trade has showed a slacker feeling of late. Gingers and peppers are firm, though no advance has taken place.

Dried Fruits—The steamer Jacona, the second fruit boat from the Mediterranean, has left Halifax, and will arrive in Montreal some time this week. Reports as to the first cargo, which came on the Bellona, are to the effect that the fruits were small, but firm, and of a fair average quality. The demand for all lines of raisins is heavy, and Valencias appear to be scarce. Prices on currants are firmly held, and the demand is brisk.

Nuts—Shelled walnuts are high in the primary markets, and are due for an advance to the retailer. Rice and Tapioca—The tapioca trade has been treated to another illustration of the short crop this year by the raise of a half-cent in prices. This was not unexpected, in view of the very firm prices prevailing in the primary markets, and recent advances in them made it a certainty. There seems to be little doubt that they will be well maintained. Rice has been rather disappointing of late, and there is a weak feeling in the market. No changes are reported in price.

Evaporated Apples — Evaporated apples seem to be having fully as heavy a demand as they have ever had, in spite of the present high quotation. There is too much of a shortage for dealers to take any chance of losing the necessary supplies. Demand for export is good, at high prices.

CANNED GOODS

MONTREAL.—Since the recent advances there has been no change in canned goods. Sales are extra good, however, as the short supplies have made it necessary for the dealers to lay in stocks as soon as possible. Peas are scarce, and in view of this a further advance would not be any surprise. Tomatoes also are getting more than their share of trade.

In fish, salmon of all kinds is at a premium, and some lines are almost entirely cleaned out.

Meats are in fair demand at current prices.

TORONTO.—Canned goods are advancing in some lines and to repeat a well worn phrase are valuable property. Speaking in regard to tomatoes, and practically the same applies to all the principal lines of canned goods, a jobber said this week: "Name your price and you can sell them. Price is not now so much the question as is 'have you got any to sell?' But the majority of the trade are showing but little desire to sell. They prefer to hold off, feeling that prices are continually going up." According to jobbers there is considerable buying going on just now and they consider it a wise policy. At the end of the year when stock taking is in progress the grocer finds his supplies of canned goods pretty well depleted and orders new goods. This in fact becomes general about that time and the increased business will have a tendency to send up prices to even a higher figure. The opinion of the wholesale trade is that present buying for the future is good business, especially with the canned goods situation as it is this season. It is now definitely known that the delivery of tomatoes will only be 66 per cent. of the orders. In salmon, deliveries of cohoes are stated by jobbers to be only 50 per cent. of orders and pinks are likely to be between 30 and 50 per cent.

Salmon is therefore one of the strong features of the market just now and there are several months yet before the next pack comes in. Salmon is really a staple and even with prices advancing the demand holds firmly.

ONTARIO MARKETS

POINTERS—

Shelled Walnuts—At 40c and going up.

Prunes—Very firm.

Beans—A little easier.

Toronto, Nov. 4th, 1910.

Jobbers are busy delivering nuts, dried fruits and other such goods that are chiefly for the Christmas season. Currants, raisins, table raisins, dates, figs, peel and all varieties of commercial nuts are going out and are going out at high prices. The market in practically every instance is strong. In regard to dried fruits, even evaporated apples are showing indications of reaching to a higher figure. Prunes are decidedly strong just now and there is every reason to believe that present prices are not at all stationary. Currants and raisins are steady. New dates arrived this week and are being delivered. Like the other dried fruits, they are also slightly higher than last year.

Nuts are holding a strong position with walnuts particularly so. There are some who believe that the supply of shelled walnuts will not be sufficient for the demand and even now the price is high and is on the upward trend. Almonds, Brazils and peanuts are all in the same "elevator" and while higher prices may not be the most pleasant greeting of the consumer at the Christmas season, there does not seem to be any other recourse.

Canned goods are losing none of the ground that has been accredited to them. Demand is good, stocks are short and prices are going up. Those desiring to sell are few and they are not having any trouble disposing of whatever supplies they may consider a surplus in these times of scarcities.

Sugar is not very strong at its last reduction. There is no special heavy buying, and there was none expected for the reason that sugar has had its day. Among the trade there are those who look for another drop in prices.

Sugar.—Prices remain the same as last week's. There is still a difference of five cents between the quotations of the two companies which have usually dropped or increased their prices the same amount at the same time. Extra granulated in bags is quoted at $4.80 and $4.85. In barrels, of course, the price is five cents higher. Gunnies or twenty pound bags are quoted at $4.90 and $4.95 respectively. Yellow in bags is at $4.45. Raw sugars are reported a shade firmer, although it is generally considered that the market is weak even at the last reduction.

Total stock of Europe and America, 647,522 tons against 137,374 tons last year at the same uneven dates. The increase of stock is 118,248 tons, against an increase of 110,618 last week. Total stocks and afloats together show a visible supply of 749,522 tons, against 664,274 tons last year, or an increase of 85,248 tons.

The influences causing this continued decline are the constant reports of everything favorable to the growing beet crops, the "factories" estimate being 7,400,000 tons, which proved larger than exepected.

The damage to the Cuba crop by the hurricane does not have the sustaining influence to the markets that it might without the notable increase of the beet sugar supplies.

The highest estimates made of the Cuba crop damage place it at about 100,000 tons, while other estimates consider that whatever damage is done is fully offset by the good done the growing cane by the heavy rainfall. It will be well into December before a close estimate of the crop can be made. In the meantime some Cuban merchants who approve of the damage estimates place the crop at 1,700,000 tons until the December estimates are made.

Louisiana started sugar making October 17th, with favorable weather crop conditions. A good yield is expected from the smaller acreage.

The consumption of the Convention countries of Europe for the year ending August 31, 1910, was 4,418,443 tons, against 4,453,589 tons the previous year, a decrease of only 35,146 tons, notwithstanding the higher prices of the year.

France and the United Kingdom were the only countries showing decrease.

This is an indication that with low prices for the present campaign, the consumption may increase correspondingly to the increased production.

Syrups and Molasses.—There is continued demand for syrups with good business at the last reduction.

Dried Fruits.—Dried fruits are receiving considerable attention just now. New dates have been received and are being delivered. They arrived on November 1st and orders are now being filled. Figs are also prominent from the fact that they have not long been on the market. Prunes are going up. They are very strong apparently being scarce the world over. Those who have followed the gossip on dried fruits during the past two months or more will notice that without an exception the markets have been correctly predicted. News at first was confined to estimates upon what the crops would be. Then harvest time drew near in the various countries and the reports given are now recognized as having been most accurate. Prices in some lines may yet recede but not until after the new year. That seems to be the general feeling and a large percentage of the trade is confined to the holiday season.

Nuts.—Shelled walnuts are extremely scarce and are much higher in price. All the wholesalers are unanimous on that point. It is stated by some that they do not believe there will be a sufficient supply for the Christmas and New Year trade and as unfavorable reports continue to come, the price continues to go up. The supply referred to might include other lines. The new crop nuts have not yet arrived and it is freely stated that the supplies are not heavy. It would seem from the bearish news about shelled walnuts that any retailer who has not the supply he wants should not delay until the very season begins as it is very likely that there will be another advance or two by that time. Brokers state that the intelligence they receive from growers is to the same effect that supplies are not at all liberal and particularly shelled walnuts.

Spices—Prices are holding firmly, with the cream of tartar situation much stronger owing to the failure of the grape crop and consequently of the short supply of wine.

Evaporated Apples.—The market is advancing. Evaporaters report that the apples are nearly all done which is exceptionally early for that intelligence. Calls are being made for last deliveries to the factories and while nothing definite can be learned as to what stocks will be realized they are bound to be small. The home price now is too high for export and unless a change occurs the new stocks will have to be consumed at home. There is a feeling that there will not be enough for home consumption, but more definite news in this regard is not yet at hand.

Beans.—The market is a little easier owing to the fact that shipments have been heavy and with the orders filled and the rush over, there has been a noticeable easier feeling.

Winnipeg, Nov. 3.—The market condition is quite the reverse of that of a few weeks ago. For some time it was felt that high prices in the general line were about to rule during the winter season, but this week some sudden changes downward have been recorded. This results from the market manipulations in buying centres, and the abundant crops in the lines so affected.

In the west merchants will readily take advantage of present prices since their stocks have been altogether too light for many weeks. The lack of demand on the part of the consumer has not been the cause of merchants ordering lightly on a few of the lines, but simply the anticipation of lower prices. A brisk trade, however, has been going on in a wide range of goods. Dealers have been ordering often but in small quantities. This in the end seems to be the best method to pursue, as it curtails superflous stocks and leaves the merchant in an advantageous position to order heavily when the right time arrives.

Sugar.—The decline of 10 cents last week is maintained to-day and of course the output at these prices has revived.

ALBERTA MARKETS.

Calgary, Nov. 3.—The prices of Ontario canned goods have been steadily advancing in the west. The scarcity in that province is the reason the wholesalers assign for the advance.

"We haven't been able to fill sixty per cent. of our orders," a local dealer stated to the representative of The Grocer. Consequently the prices on tomatoes, peas, beans, and other canned goods from Ontario still soars.

Sugar has declined slightly and is selling for $5.84 now.

BRITISH COLUMBIA MARKETS.

Vancouver, Nov. 3.—Last week saw a reduction in the price of sugar, it being quoted now at $5.70. This is the first reduction for some time, though dealers expect that it will get down to where it was a year ago. The drop in sugar is an odd reduction, that is, there are no others to record to make an even number. On the contrary, advances are in line. Dealers are apprehensive concerning potatoes. Some of the wholesale men have gone into the upper country to buy and are offering their purchases at $30 a ton, and in one instance at $32. Locals are nearly as high. Last year this same thing took place, and at the close of the season prices went down with a thud, the best offering at $15. Still those who had bought in cleared, as the prices previous to the break were good.

The new prices for canned tomatoes, corn and peas are announced. For tomatoes, $1.50, compared with $1.27½ a year ago, which means no retail price of two for two bits. Corn, $1.17½, as against $1.02½ and $1.05, and peas, $1.35 for all grades, except petit pois. The old price for peas was $1.15 for standard and $1.20 for early June, but this was increased to $1.35 some months ago.

NEW BRUNSWICK MARKETS.

St. John, Nov. 3.—There has been considerable activity in the wholesale markets during the last week and several lines experienced a decided slump. Manitoba flour declined 20c a barrel, and Ontarios went off 10c. Oatmeal is quoted 35c lower, and sugar fell off 15c. Lard is also a little easier, both pure and compound, and salt pork is down 75c to $1 a barrel. Canned goods are much higher than the opening price, tomatoes being quoted at $1.30, and peas at $1.17½ to $1.20. Cheese is also higher, as the dealers are holding heavy stocks. All nuts show a considerable advance over last year. Shelled walnuts are now being held at 40c a pound, which was the former retail price. Dried fruits are commencing to come in, and several large consignments of seeded raisins have been received. Malaga fruit is also arriving now.

NOVA SCOTIA MARKETS.

Halifax, Nov. 3.—The autumn trade in the wholesale grocery lines is quite brisk. Collections are only fair, but on this score the dealers are not making any complaint.

Pork and pork products are showing signs of a decline, and dealers think that the outlook for a reduction in prices in the near future is good.

The sugar markets are easier, a decline in the local market of 15c per 100 pounds having taken place this week. Extra standard granulated is now sell-

Butter continues firm and high. Some small tubs of dairy were marketed this week for the Thanksgiving trade, and sold at 24c to 25c per pound. Creamery prints are quoted at 26c to 28c.

Flour is easier, there being a drop of 10c per barrel on standard brands this week.

An advance has taken place in the price of cream of tartar. The wholesalers say that they now have to pay 8c per pound more for crystals than at the beginning of the month. The advance is due to the failure of the grape crop. Wholesalers, who a few weeks ago, were asking 25c to 27c for cream of tartar, now ask 30c to 32c. The price of crystals is the highest in 20 years.

Shrinkage Losses in Handling Produce

Western Ontario Dealer Advises That 10 Per Cent. be Deducted From Weight to Overcome This—Thinks That a Grocer Who Pays a Farmer for Eggs Above the Wholesale Market Price Loses Money and is Not Fair to His Town Customers — Some Experiences Given.

By H. R. Daniels.

Butter and eggs worth more than money! Impossible, you say; nevertheless, this condition actually prevailed in one Western Ontario town for over a year, and, let me add, is likely to exist again at any time.

Permit me to explain: assuming that eggs are worth say 20c in the wholesale markets and a merchant pays 22c for them, is it not as plain as day that one dollar's worth of eggs are equivalent in buying power to $1.10 in cash at his store? In other words, Farmer Brown's dollar's worth of produce will purchase as much as $1.10 of his city cousin's hard earned cash. Just think of it. Here is a dead loss of 10 per cent. which if not counteracted in some way must eventually spell failure in the face of a steadily declining margin of profit.

No Sound Reason Given.

Nor are the reasons given by those who are responsible for this policy of a convincing nature. Generally, of course, the object is to promote trade. Yet this must loose its stimulus as soon as competitors fall into line. One dealer at least defends his policy of regularly paying an advanced price for butter by the statement that he is able to retail practically all he gets to his town customers at a price sufficient to protect him. Yet this seems grossly unfair to those patrons who pay cash for their groceries and who, in fact, constitute the real back-bone of his trade.

This leads us to a consideration of a vital point, viz., how may we determine what constitutes a fair price for produce? This will be governed by the season, loss by shrinkage being much heavier in the warm weather.

Is Shrinkage Figured?

Right here, Brother Grocer, let me ask, "are you getting out even, profit not considered, on the butter you buy during July, August and September?" At first thought you may say "yes": but let's see. Do you figure the shrinkage resulting from careless working of the butter and which will surely take place in your cellar, and do you make allowance for it?

The writer has seen 2¼ lbs. water taken from a 28 lb. crock of butter by a simple manipulation with the ladle in emptying. This is approximately 8 per cent.

Doubtless this is an extreme case, yet under the most favorable conditions I believe it will average 4 per cent. to 5 per cent. Some dealers endeavor to eliminate this loss by employing a squeezer to separate the milk and water from the butter. These are then returned to the crocks and the weight deducted. This however, is a slow process and not always practical. Others again estimate the quantity of moisture and make due allowance. This, too, is a dubious procedure and liable to arouse a suspicion in the minds of customers that they are not getting a square deal.

The Freight Charges.

To the above losses must be added the cost of shipping tubs or boxes. As the closest price on these is 26c., and as a box contains about 58 lbs. net, it will be seen that this means practically another ½c per lb. In the winter the butter, of course, comes in rolls and empty packing cases may be utilized for shipping, though something must be added for wrapping.

Advises Deducting 10 Per Cent.

Keeping the foregoing in view we are able to arrive at an approximately fair price for our produce. This, I believe should be regularly determined by deducting 10 per cent. from the prevailing market price. This practice would protect the merchant and at the same time be fair to his customers. Of course, such a policy could only be maintained by a concerted action of the dealers in each town.

One of the chief causes of the success of Fels-Naptha soap with the grocery trade was its distribution without any prizes, premiums, schemes and other nuisances. A steady, satisfactory sale and assured popularity with women were greater premiums.

A Sharp Decline in Pork Products

Live Hogs Have Dropped From $9.25 to $6.90 in Toronto During the Past Month—Decrease in Prices of Lard, Boiled Ham, Smoked Ham, etc., Announced This Week — Butter is Still Weak, But Has Improved Since the Last Report — Poultry Trade for Holiday was Quite Satisfactory — Pickled Eggs in Greater Demand and are Quoted Higher.

Undoubtedly a feature of the grocery market just now is the condition of the provision market. In the issue of October 7th live hogs were quoted at as high as $9.25. This week they are bringing only $6.90. That is a criterion of the whole market. Lard is down a quarter of a cent in some places, and pork, in its various marketable forms, is down practically all along the line. This decline is seasonable according to general reports, and in addition, supplies are coming in more freely than in the past. The drop has been sudden, and it has been rather heavy.

Supplies of butter are falling off now, but still the market is on the weak side. There is still a good make and while the season is nearing a close it has not yet given up the ghost. Demand is good, and at present conditions are about to change. That is, it is evident that with decreased supplies in the near future butter prices will become firmer.

Eggs are bringing the price. New-laids are scarce and the demand on pickled eggs has increased the price of the latter. Storage eggs are now depended upon for most of the supplies, and will have to supply the bulk of the trade for many weeks to come.

The holiday brought out large supplies of poultry and they are still coming in. The price is favorable and trade has been good.

MONTREAL.

Provisions—Hogs are coming in freely, in fact so much so that prices have been pounded down a full half-cent on both live and dressed. Other lines of provisions are holding firmly, on account of the heavy buying. Evidently winter preparations are in order, and the prospects are for a fine trade this fall.

Butter—Butter receipts are falling off somewhat, and evidently are going to be below last year's figures for the next few weeks. The reason assigned for this, in view of the receipts for the season being higher, is that the exports to the States have not fallen correspondingly with decrease in the make. This has cut down supplies here somewhat. Receipts for the week are 5,954 packages, as against 6,043 same week last year. For the season they are 384,432 packages, as against 339,258 same season last year.

Receipts for the week are 56,530 boxes, as against 46,003 same week last year. For the season they are 1,815,787 boxes, as against 1,796,280 same season last year.

Eggs—New-laids are scarce, and apparently growing scarcer every day. Prices are high and firm. Storage eggs are coming on the market in considerably increased quantity. Prices are as yet unchanged, though the increase of demand for the Thanksgiving trade has strengthened the market to a large extent. Receipts for the week are only 1,374 cases, as against 1,663 same week last year. For the season they are 175,577 cases, as against 180,346 same season last year.

Provisions—Live hogs have dropped to $6.90, and other prices have followed in the same direction. Just a month ago hogs at country points were bringing as high as $9.25, so that it will be understood how rapid has been the slump. At this season there is always reduced prices, and, besides, the deliveries of hogs have been heavier. Lard is down locally a half a cent, the lower price ruling with the most houses. Hams, cooked and smoked, are also quoted at lower prices. Heavy mess pork and short cuts are also reduced.

Chocolate "BORDO" Are Trade Builders

One of the most notable successes in the Confectionery world is "Bordo" Chocolates.

Now-a-days the public is showing a keen discrimination in the matter of buying Chocolates, so that when they ask for their favorite they name the kind they want; invariably the name is "Bordo."

The reason is, their purity of composition, the excellence of the materials used, and the delicacy of their unique flavor.

Those retailers who have stocked "Bordo" have found them a most paying line, and it is encouraging both to retailers and to us to know that the demand is increasing by leaps and bounds.

People who have tried this specialty, not only continue to buy them, but are talking about them. "Bordo" are now the fashion, and the fashion is one that will not change.

No Complaints Now Heard About Canadian Flour

E. H. S. Flood, Canadian Trade Commissioner, writing from the Barbados, states that complaints regarding Canadian flour there are no longer heard and that in the future the importation will steadily increase year by year.

"On looking into the customs report," he says, "and inquiring of the officials it is found that Western Canada flour shipped via New York is credited to the United States so that there is no way of finding exactly how much Canada is now supplying but it is safe to say that at least half comes from Canada though the returns would not show it."

PLANS FOR SUGAR REFINERY.

St. John, N.B., Nov. 3.—Interest was awakened last week in the proposal to establish a sugar refinery in St. John by the filing of the plans of the Atlantic Sugar Refinery Co., of Montreal. The plans were filed on Saturday last with the city clerk by F. R. Taylor, legal representative of F. C. Durant, the promoter of the project. The plans provide for the building of a plant to cost in the vicinity of $2,000,000 and it is expected an announcement will be made shortly as to the time for the commencement of the work.

A Decline in Flour is Expected

Wheat Market Has Been Going Down and There is a Feeling That Flour Should Take Another Drop—Millers State, However, That Previous Prices Had Been Low and The Decline in Flour Simply Equalizes Conditions for Them—Good Trade in Rolled Oats, and Market Prices Likely to be Stationary for Some Time—Price of Ontario Wheat Near 75 Cents.

Wheat has declined considerably during the past week, the market seeming to be entirely under bearish influence. As prices continue to the level on which an export demand might be created, the Liverpool market seems to keep lower than it by dropping at the same time, with the result that Canadian prices are always too high. Of late, however, the bearish movement has been more marked and it looks as if the price will decline to a figure at which a lot of business will be transacted.

While wheat has been going down, flour has been holding firmly and every decline means money for the mills while the prices of flour remain at their old figures. It is possible that flour will not be reduced, but judging from past happenings it is more likely that some one will come in on the decline and cut prices. A miller stated this week that he would not be surprised to hear of a decline in flour now at any time, that is while wheat prices are at their present level.

There has been good business in rolled oats and the market seems to have reached firm ground. The oat market, however, is considered strong just now, and while it is difficult to even surmise what will be the next movement, it seems that the market is likely to hold at its present figures for a time.

Ontario wheat is just now on a rather dull market, and as far as business goes there seems to be but little doing. The price is practically down to 75c, and a miller chuckled as he expressed the opinion that the Ontario farmer was "going to get it in the neck" this year. The farmers held off their wheat when they could have received a dollar for it. Now it is nearing 75c.

The European visible grain supply this week amounts to 104,216,000 bushels, as compared with 101,228,000 last week, the exact jump being 2,988,000 bushels. The supply is now almost 24,000,000 bushels larger than it was at the same time last year.

Yesterday the Canadian visible grain supplies were estimated as follows:—Wheat, this week, 11,031,000; last week, 10,415,000; last year, 12,068,000. Oats, this week, 8,508,000; last week, 8247,000; last year, 3,099,000. The difference in oats stocks is accounted for, of course, by the retention of much of last year's crop.

MONTREAL.

Flour—Flour market is somewhat weaker this week, owing to the uncertain state of the wheat market. Although no actual decline has as yet taken place, demand has fallen off considerably, buyers seeming to feel assured that such a movement is in prospect. Even for export the demand is light.

Rolled Oats—Oatmeals are down 20c this week, as a result of the weakness of the oat market. In addition to this, sales are not what they should have been, particularly for export trade. In view of the approaching close of navigation this is rather an unlooked-for condition, but it may change in the next few days. Local trade is only fair at the decline.

TORONTO.

Flour—There is not a great deal of interest in flour just now, except in watching the market. As the price of wheat recedes it is expected that another drop in flour prices may materialize, although the principal mills give no reason for that expectation just now. On the whole the trade has not improved a great deal on the conditions of the past few weeks. There is a noticeable feeling of hope in some quarters that the price of wheat will go lower, as these have for a long time now been waiting for a good export business, and they see in reduced prices their hopes about to be fulfilled.

Cocoa Campaign Appropriate for This Season

With the beginning of the cold season there is ushered in the time during which cocoa has one of its largest sales. This is a matter of some concern to the grocer who has the cocoa trade all to himself. There is no need of waiting until the people ask for it of their own accord. It is not a difficult matter to arrange a window and in addition it is timely to talk cocoa to customers.

One plan that might be worked out in a cocoa window would be to use a small table, probably one such is found in a parlor would present the best appearance. A dainty cloth laid on top is preferable and then show a small tea service with two or three cups and saucers. Fill the sugar bowl with lump sugar and in a prominent position on the table put a can or package of some good brand of cocoa.

A neat show card against one of the legs of the table should be appropriate and on the floor of the window pyramids of cocoa tins or packages could be arranged.

Social evenings will be numerous throughout the fall and winter and cocoa will be in big demand from that point alone. The dealer needs simply to suggest it. Then in many homes it is always a bed-time drink with a few light cakes to promote pleasant dreams. This is a common practice and not only can cocoa be shown to advantage but the grocer is making no mistake by pushing loaf sugar, fancy cakes and cookies as well. An attractive window combining these goods could be easily arranged.

Wholesaler Claims That Salmon Will Cease to be Staple.

The salmon market interests a particular Western Canada wholesaler who asks the question how long will salmon be a staple. He points to the ever increasing markets, big fields that had no demand for salmon heretofore, the high cost of living and the resultant dependence on salmon. Europe, Western Canada, Australia and other lands are beginning to recognize the value of salmon and as the demand increases the price has increased. This wholesaler, therefore, considers his question a pertinent one, for with every advance in price the tendency is to get away from the general public's purse, he claims.

F. W. Thompson, Montreal, general manager of the Ogilvie Flour Mills Co., has left for the west on a business trip.

The retail grocery store of S. C. Carpenter, St. George Street, Moncton, N.B., was destroyed by fire recently. Mr. Carpenter carried about $1,500 of a stock and it was practically all destroyed. He places his loss at $1,500, with $700 insurance.

You can't guarantee cheap flour

FLOUR that you can't back up with all the strength of your personal recommendation—
Flour that falls down weakly, that fails to bear out your quality pledges—
This is the dangerous staple to handle, Brother Grocer.

For no maker on earth can "moneyback" a product in which he has no confidence, in which economy of production is the prime factor.

The maker escapes his liability with "the sale"—it's the dealer—YOU—who must face the irate customer, the long line of complaints, the business irretrievably lost, the discouragement, the disappointment.

If the maker can't guarantee "cheap" flour, neither can YOU.

And the customer cannot recommend its use to others, and you lost the very best advertising there is.

You get no "to-morrow's profits," don't you see. Because low price and poor work go hand in hand in flour making—cheapness in the right hand means a raw deal in the left.

Sell FIVE ROSES, Brother Grocer.

It is doubly guaranteed; by us, by you.

You can't talk quality too strongly, but FIVE ROSES will bear you out.

And in case of accident, for we are dealing with the human element, we want to make everybody happy.

And the trade says this is "a good company to deal with."

Consider this when you are in the buying mood.

Easier Feeling in Price of Potatoes

Reports of Good Crops Have Had the Effect of Slightly Easing the Market—Lemons and Oranges are Firm and Market is Generally Strong—Apples are Quoted at Higher Prices—Peaches are Done and Pears are Becoming Scarcer—Number of Imported Goods Gradually Increasing With Passing of Home-Grown Goods.

The holiday created a good demand for fruits and some vegetables, too. Some state that it was a "good trade, but nothing to write home about." Others claim to have done a nice business, and altogether it undoubtedly helped trade to a great extent. At the present season the market is what might be termed "betwixt and between." The home-grown fruits are passing and gradually dependence is being placed on outside markets and importations are already being made. At the present time the market is undergoing its annual transformation, and it will not be long until imported goods predominate again.

There is a certain firmness to the lemon and orange market. Lemon supplies are scanty and the first shipment to arrive this week will not do much good, it is believed. Late Valencia oranges are high, as are also the new Florida crop.

Apples are decidedly firm and show every inclination to remain so. The demand is good, but the supply is small and high prices are expected to curtail the total amount of business transacted this year. Valencia onions are arriving in better condition, as are also Almeria grapes. The first car of new dates arrived this morning. Peaches are to all purposes done, and pears are nearly in the same condition. The market is generally pretty firm. Potatoes are a little easier, the result of encouraging crop conditions and a good yield. The only discordant note in the potato market are reports of rot showing in some places, more or less seriously.

MONTREAL.

Green Fruits—Thanksgiving has given a much needed impetus to the green fruit trade. Dealers report apples as popular, and all lines of table fruits have also been much in demand. There has been, of course, the usual large demand for cranberries, and this year it seems to be if anything better than last year.

Vegetables—While all lines of vegetables have been in brisk demand lately, there has been an especial call for tomatoes and sweet potatoes. Supplies of all lines have proved ample to meet the requirements, however, and as a result prices are no higher. The market is much firmer, though, and the trade are well satisfied.

Fruit—The first steamer carrying new lemons was expected on Thursday of this week, and only a small quantity of lemons are said to be on board. A fairly large share is destined for this city, but already an offer has been made for them, with the possibility of a sale materializing. The lemon market is firm, with reports from the Sicilian ports showing no more definite announcements of the shipments. Apples are bringing stiff prices throughout the country, with prices of a rather wide range. The best offerings are naturally for the choicest fruit, and as these are none too plentiful the price is going up. First quality oranges are bringing a good price. Late Valencias are nearly done and this adds to the price of the western fruit. New Floridas are coming in, but not plentiful enough, and no one wants to buy green fruit. Peaches seem to have passed away, and pears are pretty nearly done. It should not be long now until imported fruits will again be unopposed, and, as a fruitman recently said, the home-grown article has had its day for this year. Grapes are still selling well and had a good holiday run. Demand for cranberries has also been good. Malaga grapes have likewise been moving well. On the whole the market continues satisfactory.

Vegetables—There seems to be an easier feeling in potatoes. The price is quoted at a reduction on last week's quotations, and the reports from the country are to the effect that the crop is a good one. It is also said that there is considerable loss from rot in some places. Wax beans by the hamper indicate the passing of home-grown kind. As other stocks are exhausted and the public's taste demands the vegetables, they will be imported in turn. Japanese persimmon were shown by some houses this week. Canadian tomatoes are still arriving, and are also in good demand yet, even if the season is practically over. Cucumbers are done, and gherkins are becoming scarce.

Christmas Navel Oranges are Not Likely to be High

Regarding the California navel crop a recent market review says: "In the past it has always proven a bad feature for future markets to have the Christmas market too high. Dealers would stock up with fruit that they could not sell at a profit, and in consequence the January market has always been slow. To offset this feature the shipments have been usually held back in the early part of January, but with the big crop in sight for this year there can be no holding back and it would seem good policy to get lots of fruit out in December at a price that would sell the goods. A big Riverside packer stated recently that he had never seen the fruit so far advanced at this time of the year. He said that some fruit in some orchards was already showing a good color and he had eaten fruit that was already fairly sweet. If there is much fruit of this kind it is reasonable to suppose that more will be shipped in December this year than ever before and if so, this would certainly seem to imply lower prices than common."

From this it would seem that the price of navels for the Christmas trade are likely to be lower than usual.

Fish Shipments to the Interior Larger

Reports From Coast Show Increased Activities—Fishermen Received Doubled Price for Sardines—Inclement Weather and Dog Fish Continue to Interfere With the Catch—Higher Prices in Some Lines of Fish Are Expected Soon—Fresh Halibut Said to be off the Market—Depend on Frozen Fish.

NEW BRUNSWICK

St. John, N.B., Nov. 3.—The fish situation thus far shows no sign of improvement. All kinds of fish are scarce, but the dealers managed to get enough last week to tide them over. The weather and the dogfish are given as the chief cause of the difficulty. One of the local dealers in summing up the conditions said it was as bad as it could possibly be. The like of it had never been known here and the same was true of every part of the coast. One vessel which was in last week had only made two trips during the month of October, whereas it usually made two trips a week. In making up a car of mixed fish for shipment to the west last week, a local dealer was hard put to get enough to fill it. A quantity of smoked herring was desired but they could not be secured. It is estimated that the entire output of smoked herring to date has not exceeded 5,000 boxes. At present the fish dealers in Eastport are offering 6 cents a pound for the fish as they come from the smoke houses, without being boxed. This price is equal to 30 cents a box, whereas they usually sell at about 6 or 7 cents a box.

The sardine fishermen have at last won out in their fight with the packers at Eastport and Lubec and they are now receiving $12 a hogshead for their catch, instead of the $6 offered earlier in the season. At this price it pays the fishermen better to go after the sardines and little deep sea fishing is being done.

Despite the scarcity, the prices show little or no change. The only fresh fish offering at present are cod, haddock, and a few mackerel. In frozen stock there are salmon, halibut and mackerel. The usual lines of smoked and salt fish are offered.

NOVA SCOTIA.

Halifax, Nov. 3.—Notwithstanding the fact that stormy weather on the coast has greatly interfered with fishing operations, large shipments of fish are being made from Nova Scotia to upper Canadian cities. The fish trade between the Maritime Provinces and Quebec, Montreal and Toronto, and points farther west, is showing great development. More fish products are being shipped to these points than ever before, and the Maritime dealers are now catering to this trade. All kinds of fish are being shipped, fresh, dry, pickled and smoked. Few fresh mackerel were landed during the week, the fishermen being unable to set their nets owing to the stormy weather.

Shipments of fish to foreign parts are quite brisk, totalling between 6,000 and 7,000 packages.

The local receipts of oysters from Prince Edward Island are light this season, and the price for the choicest stock continues high.

ONTARIO.

Toronto, Nov. 3.—Fresh halibut is now practically entirely done and is being replaced by frozen white fish and frozen halibut. It is reported that in one or two lines an increase in price will be made during the coming week. The season of fresh fish is beginning to pass and more attention will be paid to frozen fish. The oyster season is gradually increasing and a good business is now being done. There is a fair demand for smoked and pickled fish.

BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Vancouver, Nov. 3.—The fish market is quiet this week, no halibut having come in. With the search in further waters for this fish, it is interesting to note that in the "twenty years ago" column of a local paper, a catch of 12,000 pounds of halibut was made at Plumper's Pass. This place is half way between Vancouver and Victoria in the Gulf of Georgia. Nowadays it is difficult to get halibut in Hecate Straits, hundreds of miles up the coast, and for the past month or two the boats have had to go to Alaskan waters.

There is no change in prices this week. Halibut still holds at four cents. Since there is not many fish of other varieties incoming, there is little change otherwise.

Local oysters still hold their own. They grow to a good size in the lagoons set apart for them.

NEWFOUNDLAND.

St. John's, Nov. 3.—Tinned salmon will be scarce in the winter. The herring fishery promises to be good. It will be noted that codfish has advanced. The Labrador fishery for the past season was only about half the average catch.

QUEBEC.

Montreal, Nov. 3.—Haddock and cod are still scarce. Pike and pickerel are now arriving freely, but the season is almost finished. There is not a great deal of fresh halibut on the market, but the frozen article is now on the market. Fair supplies of perch and bullheads are arriving. In smoked fish haddies continue scarce. New kippers and bloaters are arriving.

Growers and Shippers of "Coast Sealed" Oysters

88 COLBORNE STREET, TORONTO

Dear Mr. Merchant:

It's well to be careful about these things in connection with your oyster business:—

See that your oysters come from communities that produce oysters with the best flavor and that these oysters mature sufficiently firm to retain that flavor for the longest time possible. See that shipment is made in the most sanitary package obtainable; and that the oysters are refrigerated at a low temperature, and also protected from freezing. And be sure you display them attractively.

Let us add that "Coast Sealed" Oysters are grown on ground that is famous for the flavor of its oysters; shipped to you in the "Coast Sealed" Carrier—the acknowledged peer of all packages, properly refrigerated all the way.

We solicit your enquiry,

The total importation of fish into Barbados for 1909 and the two previous years amounted respectively to $344,000, $334,000, and $227,000. As the smaller neighboring islands are supplied with part of their food stuffs by Barbados, these figures are to be reduced by the amount which is exported to these islands, which, one year with another, amounts to about one half the importation.

Last year Great Britain exported to the Barbados $75,000 worth of butter, Canada $6,100, United States $7,300, Denmark, $3,625, and France $8,500 worth. Denmark and France gained ground over 1908 but the other countries fell behind.

WHERE CRANBERRIES GROW.

Cape Cod the Principal Producer But Canada Has Many Bogs.

Cape Cod, while not the only home of the cranberry, is recognized as one of the largest producing fields and its product is usually considered the standard. One of the most widely known promontories on the New England coast is Cape Cod where the cranberry industry is rivalled by fishing.

Wisconsin is regarded as a heavy provider and Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island are both large growers. Parry Sound in Northern Ontario also grows the cranberry. In fact it can be profitably grown in almost any swampy place if given proper attention.

Nearly everyone in the Cape Cod district has his cranberry bog. Some are so extensive that their owners are enabled to live comfortably the year round on the proceeds. During this season, everyone young and old, is occupied in harvesting his or her share and after that is done he helps someone else with the same purpose in view. Boxes and barrels are in evidence from one end of the Cape to the other and everybody is busy picking and packing the fruit from dawn until dusk. The cranberry brings considerable wealth to the Cape and the houses generally indicate prosperity.

Position of the Retailer Among His Fellow Men

By W. T. Simpson.

There is a certain dignity to the grocery business that should be more generally recognized by individual grocers. They render the public an invaluable service. Through the grocer can be procured foodstuffs gathered from the four corners of the earth, and the customer is often afforded an extended system of credit that enables him to pay for these goods at his leisure.

In addition to this, most grocers protect their customers against inferior goods. The average citizen is unable to discuss from the standpoint of quality few of the articles that appear on his table. To secure protection against adulterated goods dependence is placed on the family grocer who is trusted to deliver none but genuine, pure foods. The latter from his experience is able to judge most of the goods he buys, but some grocers who may not be familiar with a particular article will in turn trust the manufacturer with whom he has had extended dealings. Thus, the grocer is rendering a great service to his customers every day in the year.

But there are some of the trade who conduct themseves as if theirs was an inferior position. They permit themselves to be badgered by persons who do not appreciates the value of a grocery store in their midst.

The leading grocers of to-day, however, are not in that class. They realize the dignity of their business, and everything about their stores and themselves is indicative of that fact. A grocer looking over his stock finds spices from the East Indies, tea from far Japan, China and India, currants from Greece, raisins from Spain, dates and figs from Turkey and Arabia, and so on—the world's best in foodstuffs collected in a good retail store.

And the store itself is in keeping with the quality of these goods. A bright clean interior, attractive arrangements of goods in conspicuous places, display bins, show cases, street windows used to advantage, everything in fact combined to give a tone of real business. It is evidence of a feeling of pride in the store and particularly is it a magnet to customers.

There is a certain dignity to practically all forms of labor and the proprietor of a grocery store is worthy of his share. But before expecting others to appreciate the service he renders them he must first realize and appreciate it himself.

Business Leaks Which Point to Grocer's Failure

Business leaks are a menace to the grocer. In spite of ordinary precautions they exist and it is only by exercising unusual care that they can be located. In many cases they have been largely responsible for failure. Herewith are given a few that should not be overlooked.

First—Ignorance of the cost of doing business; therefore, ignorance of what to charge for goods in order to be certain of selling them at sufficient profit.

Second—Not knowing the selling price of goods. Some advocate the marking of the selling price plainly on all articles, thus rendering it practically impossible for anybody in the store mistakenly to sell at too low a price.

Third—Not knowing the goods that do and the goods that do not return, the cost of handling, and what percentage of the total sales consist of non-profit-paying items; not knowing how to change the non-profitable into profitable items.

Fourth—Being short-handed, running along without sufficient store help; not allowing yourself time to study market conditions, business methods and plans for increasing your business.

Fifth—Over-buying and not having ready cash as a result. Therefore, you are left without the opportunity of taking advantage of any cash discounts that may be extended.

There are some grocers who want to waken up to the fact that giving promiscuous credit is not doing business. Just because some stranger who has moved to your locality leaves you a big order and promises to pay every two weeks, instead of going around the block to Smith, your nearest competitor, that is no reason why you should feel particularly elated. There have been Smiths who thanked their fates, when many such customers passed their door for some other grocers.

An actual happening will illustrate the point. A family moved into an Ontario town. The husband went to a grocer and told him that he had a job in prospect, that he intended to remain in the town and would it be all right, etc. The job was longer in coming than was expected. The man's ready money ran out and when he did start to work his bill had a nice little start. Other debts were owing and while he paid the grocer from time to time, the bill kept on increasing. Finally, when the grocer's clerk called at the house one morning, the new customer had gone, leaving an unpaid bill of $80.

ESSEX TO GROW BROOM CORN.

Some Claim it Will Flourish Wherever Ordinary Corn Grows Well.

A despatch from Essex County, Ont., says that in the near future Essex may be an important broom corn centre.

A citizen of Comber has contracted with a number of farmers to grow broom corn at $100 per ton, he supplying the seed and furnishing the instructions with regard to handling the crop. Between 100 and 200 acres have been secured. A farmer near Ruthven has been growing broom corn for some years, and also makes brooms on a small scale. It is claimed by some that the corn can be grown in any locality where ordinary corn can be successfully grown. The future will prove whether this is true or not. Hitherto the product seems to have been largely confined to Illinois and the south-western states.

Some Government Reports on Late Canadian Crops

While potatoes are selling in car lots at about 50 cents a bag and in small lots at from 60 to 70 cents, the market is likely to go higher when some of the stocks now held have been lightened. A report from the Dominion Department of Agriculture places the crop in Canada at the end of September at a little over 76 per cent. of the normal as compared with upwards of 90 per cent. last year. In the United States there was a similar falling off. Here and there throughout the country a certain amount of rot is reported but it is not believed to be serious.

A later report says that in Eastern Canada the crops have obtained a high percentage in quality for nearly all crops and quantity is nearly as good as a year ago and better than in 1908. In western provinces there is a drop of about 20 per cent. in the quality of grain and roots, but threshings indicate that the yield will be larger for wheat, oats and barley than was promised at the end of August.

The total yield of beans in Canada last year was placed at 1,324,000 bus. while this year the estimate is for 1,089,000 bus.

INDIA'S TEA EXPORTS.

Figures Showing Amount Which Has Been Sent to Various Countries.

The annual report of a large tea company in London, Eng., contains information of value to the retailer who studies the markets. The following is an extract:

"It is difficult to give exact figures of the amount of tea grown throughout the world, as a great deal is consumed in the countries of production, particularly China and Japan, where it is grown on small farms and consumed locally, so that it does not appear in any returns. Probably the world's total production is about 1,200 million pounds annually of which about half is grown in China, rather more than three-eighths in the British Empire (India, Ceylon and Natal) and rather less than one eighth in other countries, of which Japan, Java and Formosa are the most important.

"This calculation would give rather more than 450 million pounds as the amount of British-grown tea produced each year. This year the crop has considerably exceeded this quantity, India having produced in round numbers 262 million pounds, Ceylon 191 million pounds and Natal 2 million pounds, making a total of 455 million pounds.

"The tea exported from India during the last two seasons was distributed as follows:—

	1909-10 lbs.	1908-9. lbs.
United Kingdom	180,000,000	168,000,000
Australia	8,500,000	8,900,000
America	5,600,000	5,500,000
Russia and China...	30,000,000	25,000,000
Other Ports...	11,000,000	13,000,000
	235,100,000	220,400,000

"Russia and China are put together in this table because practically all the tea sent to China from India consists of dust and broken tea, which is converted into "brick tea" and sent to Russia.

"As will be noticed, the United Kingdom took 12 million pounds more than last year, but in spite of this large increase in imports, prices have not fallen, the increase in consumption having been still greater. Comparing the figures for the last five years, we find that the production of British-grown tea has increased 15 million pounds. Consumption, however, has increased 48½ million abroad and 15 million at home, making an excess of consumption over production of 12½ million."

A retail dealer states that whenever he hears of price cutting he is reminded of two little boys who tried to see which could lean the farthest out of a window, the winner finishing in a hospital. A somewhat similar result inevitably awaits the price cutter, he says.

How Food Standards Will Affect Prices

Writer States That in Case of Spices They Will Tend to Keep The Market High—Consumption Ought Also to be Increased—Average Consumer Not a Judge of Quality in Spices.

By W. L. Mortimer.

One of the reasons given by manufacturers for the increased cost of spices in recent years, is the increase in consumption. This would suggest that people are demanding more and more spices as years go by, and that as the result of heavy demands the prices have been forced up. That, however, is not the only reason.

It must be admitted that there is always a growing demand for spices, and greater quantities are being consumed, but the main reason is that the idea of adulterating is passing, and instead of ground shells and many other adulterants being now used, there is an increasing tendency towards absolutely pure goods. Thus increased prices are explained to a certain extent by the fact that pure spices are now used, taking the place of foreign ingredients. Thus consumption of pure spices is increased because the genuine article is being less and less substituted by adulterants.

In the United States the Pure Food Laws demand genuine goods, and many convictions are registered weekly, showing that inspectors are vigilant. These same inspectors are taking the trouble to caution consumers against impure goods, and taking it all in all, the tendency is against inferior quality.

In Canada the Food Standards have not yet been issued. They are, however, being formulated, and some were expected to have been given to the public before now. In England Pure Food Laws have been in existence for some time, but violations have been numerous and are still reported. But public opinion together with careful inspection by the authorities will soon bring about the desired changes in the manufacture of spices.

Do Not Know Pure Goods.

In this particular market deteriorating the goods has been a rather simple matter in as much as the average citizen would not likely discover the inferior quality. Consider pepper for instance. The average person, as a matter of custom, shakes what he supposes to be pepper over his meat and then forgets all about it. He does not look for the taste of genuine pepper. Probably it is because he is not accustomed to the pure stuff. At any rate, the fact is emphasized that the consumer did not in the past pay sufficient attention to the quality of goods.

This is not intended to deal with the character of adulterations, for that has been touched upon before, but if the grocer ever stops to wonder why his spice bill is higher than it used to be, he should remember that purer goods are being used, and if he assures a customer that his spices are of the best he can secure a better price.

Manufacturers who sell pure spices only are eagerly awaiting the new standards, because all manufacturers will be put upon the same basis, and there will be less unfair competition.

Pure Mustard Too Strong.

Absolute purity cannot be found in all articles sold as spices. At least one exception is known, viz. mustard. Commercial mustard, such as is sold for table use, is a compound, for the reason that in its purest form mustard would be too strong and could not be used.

RESULTING FROM A FIRE.

Legal Case for New Brunswick Court Affecting Wholesale Grocery Firm.

St. John, N.B., Nov. 3.—The trial of the case of Reid vs. the King, which was to have been heard at the October sitting of the exchequer court here, has been postponed until the next sitting in June, 1911. In this case the suppliants are John W. Y. Smith and J. Frederick Edgett, doing a wholesale grocery business as F. P. Reid & Co., at Moncton and Campbellton. The suppliants' petition of right discloses that on October 30 and 31, 1907, a car of tobacco, cheese and the like, consigned to the suppliants, was unloaded by the servants of the I.C.R. at Campbellton and the goods placed in the warehouse, that, owing to the negligence of the crown's servants, the warehouse and contents were destroyed by fire on Thanksgiving Day of 1907. The suppliants claim the sum of $2,500. The crown, in defence, deny that there was negligence on the part of the servants of the railway, and contend that the suppliants were negligent in not removing the goods from the warehouse in the time allowed.

The marriage of E. R. Ebbitt, of Snowdon & Ebbitt, Montreal, to Miss E. Stewart, took place on October 19. Mr. and Mrs. Ebbitt have sailed for England.

This Association Figures Out Costs and Profits

Helps Its Members to Fix Retail Prices on Ham, Cheese, Butter, Etc., in Order to Prevent Losses—Shows Average Amount of Shrinkage on These Goods—Some Extracts From Circular it Sends out Showing Help That is Given.

The executive of the Glasgow Grocers' and Provision Merchants' Association prepare occasionally a booklet showing the costs of ham, bacon, butter and cheese in order, as it is stated, that traders might perceive at a glance what prices they should charge to secure a fair profit on their turnover. J. F. Holloway, a Toronto grocer recently received one of these copies from a friend in the association and it is plainly evident that it was compiled with great care.

An extract will show what the pamphlet deals with. For instance, under Belfast smoked hams appears the following:

Gross weight of 30—450 lbs.
Deduct for Shanks ..... 53 lbs.
Deduct for Bone and Skin 44 lbs.
—— 97 lbs.

Total net weight ..... 353 lbs.

Average gross weight, 15 lbs.
Average net weight, 12 lbs.

Allowing 6d. per lb. for shanks these hams work out as under, viz:

Cost Price.

Per cwt.	Per. lb. sliced.
76s.	10d.
78s.	10¼d.
80s.	10½d.
82s.	10¾d.
84s.	11d.
86s.	11¼d.

And so on.

"Note.—There should be never less than 2¼d. per lb. clear profit."

Therefore reverting to the above list the selling price would be 2¼d. added to the cost price. By this the first ham costing 10d. or 20 cents a lb. should be sold for 12¼d. or 24½ cents and so on.

Similar tables are worked out with Canadian and Wiltshire bacon showing number of pounds bought, number lost, cost per lb., net cost and selling price and gain and per cent of gain on the sales.

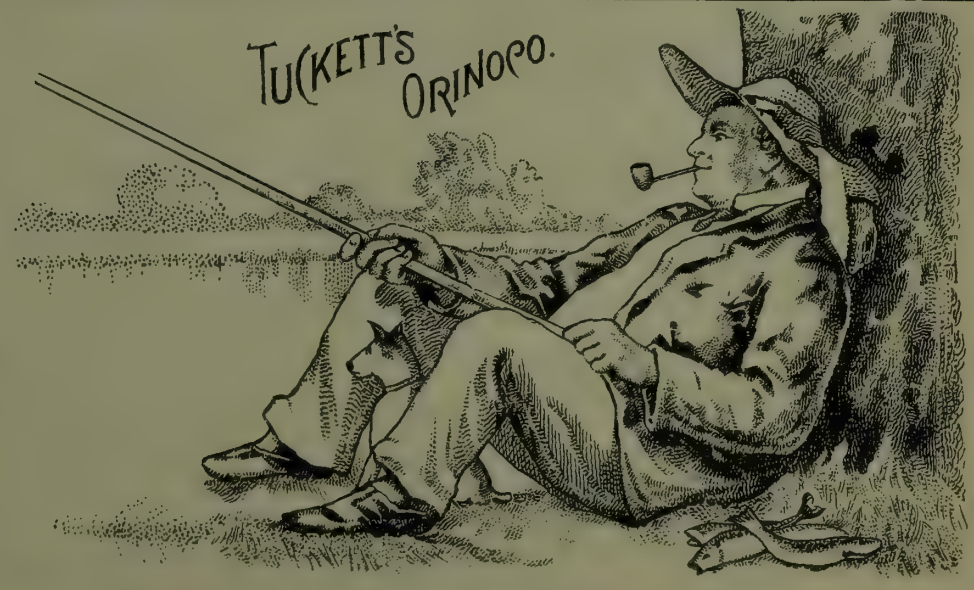
Shrinkage Losses in Cheese.

In regard to cheese it states "that on trial a number of very finest Cheddar cheese lost in six weeks between 1 and 2 lbs. each. Softer grades lost more. As ¼d. per lb. is lost in weighing, ¾d. per lb. is a fair estimate of the loss on a cheese, say of the value of 70s.

"In Dunlop cheese, the shrinkage is greater than in Cheddar," reads the circular, "and it is safe in a general working way to allow say 1d. per lb. for loss when fixing the selling price.

"On Gorgonzola, Roquefort, Stilton, etc., there is a heavy loss. If say 2d. per lb. were considered a fair profit for a Cheddar cheese, 3d. to 5d. per lb. of profit would no more than pay for these fancy cheese, which usually are unprofitable."

The Profit on Butter.



The circular reads further: "Loss on butter depends greatly on evaporation and manner of weighing. When it is considered that generally speaking a cask of butter is weighed out in small quantities, turning the scale from 200 to 300 times the necessity for sufficient allowance is self evident. In view of these facts it is certainly prudent to take at least a clear margin of 2d. per lb. on all butter selling at 1s. per lb.

Thus it will be seen that this association pays particular attention to profits—a very sane thing for it to do too.

The first cup of coffee was drunk in Europe at Venice toward the end of the sixteenth century. In the old Venetian coffee houses patrons did not pay for each cup of coffee they drank, but settled their bills at the end of each year.

Opening New Accounts

Your business will not grow unless you do add new customers constantly. The old ones will drop out with surprising regularity and those that remain will not increase their purchases materially.

Have a good live talk about your goods in THE GROCER every week. All the best grocers in Canada will read it, and if what you say is worth while, they'll steadily be influenced in your favor.

You will find THE GROCER the most powerful agent at your disposal in the cultivation of new accounts.

The Grocer will award Nine Medals for the best examples of "Constructive Salesmanship" furnished by merchants or their clerks during the next six months.

Class A.—Open to merchants or clerks in villages or towns up to 2,500 population. 1st, solid gold medal; 2nd, silver medal; 3rd, bronze medal.

Class B.—Open to merchants or clerks in towns and cities between 2,500 and 20,000 population. 1st, solid gold medal; 2nd, silver medal; 3rd, bronze medal.

Class C.—Open to merchants and clerks in cities over 20,000 population. 1st, solid gold medal; 2nd, silver medal; 3rd, bronze medal.

The competition will close May 1, 1911. The decision will rest with a committee comprising the editors of nine of the Maclean trade newspapers.

The ability of a merchant to sell depends upon many things—buying methods, display, advertising in its various forms, store equipment, recommendation of goods, telephone service, etc.

Everything that has a bearing upon the building up of a profitable business is "Constructive Salesmanship," for salesmanship is the essence of all business. Even buying comes under that heading, because a merchant always buys with the sale in mind.

We want actual methods by which dealers have introduced new goods, broadened the scope of demand for others, and in a general way increased their turn-over and profits by the exercise of their selling power.

No contestant will be judged on his ability to write an article about his experiences. What we want is all the facts—good, hard facts. Where they come to us minus literary style, we'll do our best to furnish the latter.

The Best Proposition!

Looked at any way you please, no line of goods holds out the same inducements to the Grocer as

UPTON'S

Jams, Jellies and Marmalade

First, they are made from the finest fruits in the world—Canadian Fruits—selected by experts and preserved and bottled in an up-to-date, sanitary factory, which is a model of cleanliness. Second, the "Upton" line never 'sticks,' because our extensive consumer advertising has created a demand for these goods; and third, selling "Upton's" specialties invariably leaves a satisfaction and profit-margin behind that makes trading a pleasure.

Are you featuring "Upton's"? If not, fall in line with the "wise" ones.

All the Quality Without the Chemicals

A lot of progressive Canadian Grocers are now selling more high-grade peas than they ever did before.

Canadian Peas, Too!

These grocers have found it to be very profitable policy to push hard on our higher-grade lines because these goods are as high in quality as the best peas ever imported.

And Dominion Canners' Peas are free from chemicals; while you have often noticed a certain vivid green color on some imported peas, a color that indicates Sulphate of Copper, an unhealthy chemical coloring.

SMOKED HERRING IN BOUILLON

DELICIOUS

Here's a new line, tasty and delicately flavored, that cannot help finding favor with your particular customer.

It is put up by Chr. Bjelland & Co., of Stavanger, Norway, the packers of the famous "King Oscar" Sardines, in itself a sufficient guarantee of quality.

"The small herring packed sardine-style in spiced bouillon."

Retails profitably at 10 cents. Ask your wholesaler.

Avoid Deception

Some manufacturers, who ought to know better than DEFRAUD THE PUBLIC, sell their evaporated milk as "Cream," which it is not. There is ONE REAL CREAM on the market, and that is—

FUSSELL'S CREAM

(GOLDEN BUTTERFLY BRAND)

Evaporated Milks contain about 8 per cent. of butterfat. Fussell's CREAM contains more than three times as much.

Business Insurance

A grocer is known by the goods he sells. If he makes sure that each line stocked is the best in its class he is buying business insurance as well as merchandise. These goods are not excelled for quality, attractive packing, and price. For sale by most wholesalers.

GOODWILLIE'S FRUITS IN GLASS

Put up in a modern factory, situate in the heart of the fruit growing district, they easily lead all other brands. No detail tending to make the line most perfect has been overlooked. A trade builder and a trade holder.

TABLE RAISINS

Unless Table Raisins are consistently uniform in quality, and packed attractively, they cannot, with policy, be stocked by a grocer of the right type. His Malaga Table Raisins, or "Blue Fruit," must be always select quality and packed neatly. Specify Segalerva's when you order, and secure such fruit.

MEATS IN GLASS

Have you remarked the growing demand for these goods? Rolled Ox Tongues, Galantines, Chicken, and a variety of other meats, may be secured in various packages. They're specialties which yield a profit above the average, and require little attention.

HOW THEY WORK

A man wants credit. You think he is good. Give him a $10 Allison Coupon Book. Have him sign the receipt or note form in the front of the book, which you tear out and keep. Charge him with $10. — No trouble. When he buys a dime's worth, tear off a ten-cent coupon, and so on until the book is used up. Then he pays the $10 and gets another book. No pass books, n charging, no lost time, no errors, no disputes. Allison Coupon Books are recognized everywhere as the best.

For sale by the jobbing trade everywhere. Manufactured by Allison Coupon Company. Indianapolis, Ind.

Don't Blame Your Clerks But ——— Correct Your System of Accounting

Cut of 100 Book Size, when not in use, showing hood locked to cabinet.

Did you ever cuss your delivery boy for delivering the wrong goods to the customer, or for delivering goods to the wrong customer, and then afterwards realize that the trouble was due to careless instructions given?

Do you ever blame your clerks for losing good customers over disputed accounts when you ought to correct your method of keeping accounts which is at the seat of the trouble?

Do you ever blame your clerks for bringing forward wrong past balances, or otherwise mixing accounts and settling with customers at discounts when all this loss and trouble could be avoided with the proper system?

Do you ever wrack your brain over forgotten charges and yet not realize that your clerks forget to charge as much, if not more, than you do? They are not wholly to blame---the proper system would overcome this loss.

Mr. Merchant, the Keith System is the healing balm for all these troubles. Don't take our word for it, ask anyone who is using one, or write for full information,

A BOWSER
Self-measuring Oil Tank

is probably the one thing lacking in your store which you can least afford to do without. Because, if your sales of kerosene and gasolene are small, you need it to build a bigger, better business, and whether your business is small or large, you need it to clinch your profits by saving time in measuring and reducing losses caused by evaporation, spilling, leakage and overmeasure.

Thousands of Grocers Agree that the "Bowser" is by far their most profitable store fixture. Think of the convenience of merely having to hang the can on the nozzle and turn the crank to obtain accurate gallons, quarts, pints---no measures, no funnels, no smell, no oily hands, no contamination of other goods, no oil-soaked floors. Heavy stocks don't earn money for YOU---the wholesaler or manufacturer who loaded you up, gains. : : : : : : : :

The average grocer carries bulk tea in stock—representing an investment of about $100.00.

Just $75.00 too much.

This is why.

A full line of "SALADA" Black, Mixed and Green, pound and half-pound packages costs you about $25,00.

You buy as you require it, in small quantities—your stock is always fresh.

Yearly sales over 21,000,000 packages.

You buy often and make quick profits. You buy tea of known quality—it satisfies your customers.

You sell it quickly—conveniently—economically.

Your purchase is sold before you next invoice is due.

The freight is prepaid—the sale is guaranteed—you can return it any time if you're not satisfied.

Your money is not tied up in an unproductive bulk tea stock. Your money is hustling and earning other dollars for you when you sell "SALADA" Tea.

Grocer Should Study Insurance Policy

The Example of the General Merchant Who Did not Furnish Proofs of Loss—An Inventory of Goods is Important in Adjusting for Losses—Provisions of the Policy Must be Obeyed to the Letter—Money can be Saved if Allowance is Made for Depreciation.

Business men, in general, appreciate the protection afforded by fire insurance. As a rule, the grocer's establishment may be considered pretty safe, but reports are fairly numerous of buildings being wholly or partially destroyed by fires, some of which originate in and are confined to a particular store, while others are the result of proximity to a fire zone.

Fire is an uncertain element, and often, in spite of precautions, it finds a berth where least expected. A grocer who has all his money invested in his business must realize that there is more or less precariousness to his stock and store if for no other reason than because it is inflammable. It is a desire to safeguard his possessions that determines the grocer to secure an insurance policy. But it frequently happens that, after a fire, when a settlement is being made, he discovers to his sorrow that he is not to receive as much as he expected.

A fire insurance adjuster recently expressed his opinion upon this point, and mentioned some of the precautions that should be observed in regard to insurance.

"A number of recent cases," he said, "where retail merchants have suffered a total loss by fire and, though fully insured, failed to realize a cent on their policies, were due to the fact that the policyholder was either not familiar with the various clauses in his insurance contract, or else failed to carry out some necessary provisions of his policies.

Lost Entire Insurance.

"One case in particular was that of a general merchant whose stock, worth

Discovers to his sorrow he is not to receive as much as he expected.

several thousand dollars, was completely destroyed. The stock was covered in five companies for $5,000. Each policy provided that within 60 days after the fire, he should serve proofs of loss. This was not a difficult task because everything was burned, but for some reason he neglected to carry out the provision. Consequently, after the expiration of 60 days, the companies refused to pay. He sued all five and lost every case.

Convention Over Waiver Clause.

"He contended, of course, that the companies had waived the proof of loss requirement, and the court held that there had been no legal waiver. The courts are agreed that an insurance company by waiver can relieve the insured from the obligation to furnish proofs of loss, but that it must be very clear that the company actually did waiver the requirement.

"The reason for the clause is obvious enough to anyone with even a slight knowledge of the moral hazard involved in fire insurance. The prompt submission of proofs of loss gives the company an opportunity to ascertain the actual value of the property burned and to prevent numberless forms of fraud.

"The principal difficulty in honest fire insurance claim, so far as the small merchant is concerned, is that he does not read his policies. It is as necessary to read and digest a fire insurance policy as it is a bill of sale for a store.

"The standard form prescribed by law is the best and the insured should carefully ascertain whether his policies are of that class, otherwise he may be paying premiums for nothing. The terms embraced in the standard form are the result of legislation and have been interpreted numberless times by the courts. The law allows insurance companies to vary policies issued by them, but these variations must be properly displayed and in ink of a different color from that in which the policy is printed and therefore should be carefully read.

Importance of Inventory.

"Another important thing for the merchant to heed is the annual inventory of stock and fixtures. In my experience I have run into numbers of merchants who have carried fire insurance for years and yet have never taken an inventory. It may not be necessary now, but how can a fire insurance company adjust fire losses properly without one? It is not only impossible to adjust a loss satisfactorily without the inventory, but it is also impossible to intelligently insure against fire.

"If the merchant knows the value each year of his insurable property he is bound to save money in the expenditure of fire insurance premiums, and if he is unfortunate enough to have a fire, he will save himself considerable delay and no small amount of suspicion if he is able to present to the adjusters a list of the property he had upon the premises at the time of the fire, together with evidence in the shape of receipts and invoices.

Depreciation of Values.

"Often merchants in taking out fire insurance year after year fail to make allowance for depreciation in value. If the fixtures cost $3,000 and are insured for that amount, the owner annually loses money in premiums without securing indemnity. The fire insurance policy expressly provides that no more than the actual cash value on the day of the fire of the property burned can be recovered, and that there must be proper allowance for depreciation.

The annual inventory of stocks and fixtures.

Handling Coal Oil, etc.

"In small manufacturing establishments, groceries, drug stores and printing shops the proprietors should be sure that the policies contain provisions for the proper storage and handling of benzine, gasoline, coal oil, and other inflammable substances. The provisions of the fire insurance policy in this regard are frequently disregarded. If the policy permits the handling of a gallon of gasoline, benzine or coal oil on the premises at one time, it does not mean that two, three or five gallons may be handled and this fact is likely to make trouble in case of a loss.

"In short, if the small merchant will go further than taking the word of his agent regarding his insurance, and study the question himself, not only with a view of making certain that he is complying with the provisions of his policy, and that he can collect in case of loss, but that he is not paying too much money for the indemnity, to which he will be entitled, he will be giving an important part of his business adequate attention.

"In other words the time to see that the policy of fire insurance is in order is before, rather than after a fire."

Beware of Advertising Your Weaknesses

So Warns Writer Who Calls Attention to Disorderly Windows and Dirty Store Interiors— How Such Conditions Diminish Selling Power—Why Every Dealer is a Believer in Advertising—The Question is 'How to Make It Advantageous.'

By Henry Johnson, Jr.

Whether you like it or not; whether you "believe in it," or not; whether you know it or not, you are advertising every day you keep your doors open. Which being the case it behooves you to study advertising and study it well. And, in view of the primary importance of the subject, it is deplorable that it receives so little intelligent, unbiased consideration. For mind you, I said you advertise, but I did not say you advertise to your advantage. Many advertise their own weaknesses, bringing their faults into prominence with very unfortunate, very costly emphasis.

Brush Those Cobwebs Away.

Now why should you have the assurance, the "nerve," so to say, to pass up the subject of advertising with a careless word or two, as you so often do, clearing the decks with the one pet, sweeping assertion to which frequent repetition may have leant a meretricious authenticity? Why, bless your heart! you would not consider the installation of an elevator in such a spirit, putting your inexperienced, half-tried, hap-hazard judgment against that of those who have studied elevators for a lifetime. No: nor would you undertake the purchase of a single barrel truck in such a frame of mind. So, therefore, let us brush the cobwebs away and approach this weightiest business problem with something akin to the careful consideration and suspended judgment to which it is entitled.

Since, then, you advertise whether you want to advertise or not, let us seek to discover how you may advertise to your advantage. And let us begin with the beginning, fixing firmly in our minds the cardinal principles that, as we must advertise, we will (1) advertise honestly; and we will (2) advertise to our own advantage. This means that we must KNOW our goods thoroughly —not superficially—and that we must see to it that conditions in and about our stores are such that we can tell the naked and unvarnished truth to our OWN ADVANTAGE. This is somewhat of an undertaking when you come to consider it.

Covers a Wide Area.

To begin with, let us understand each other. Advertising is not the use of printers' ink, though printers' ink is a wonderful agent for the dissemination of knowledge, advertising and other. Advertising is vastly broader than this. Advertising embraces all business promotion. Notice that: ALL business promotion. This means that everything done about your store is advertising, positive or negative: for you or against you. That is my interpretation of advertising.

So we better begin with your windows, since the windows are your introduction to your trade. I do not think there is any single advertising medium that equals the power of your window to do or undo. To realize what this amounts to, suppose you step outside and look inwards through your windows to-day, just after you have read this column; trying to picture to yourself what would be your own impression of yourself as a merchant if you were a stranger going into your store and "sizing up" the store through that single medium. The experiment may open your eyes. For, as in things spiritual, most troubles are hidden within where they are not readily seen; so also in the grocery store most difficulties, handicaps to success and various drawbacks may be found in blindness to our surroundings; carelessness of those familiar details attention to which would spell SUCCESS.

Excuses Now Obsolete.

Let your reform in advertising begin at your windows. Clean up! Better a clean empty window than a display allowed to become dusty and fly specked therein. Continue the process clear back to the rear door and then up and down stairs, searching into every nook and cranny. The time is forever gone when any excuse will cover a dirty, disorderly store; for too many grocers have clearly demonstrated that not only is order and cleanliness possible and practicable; not only does it pay "indirectly" as advertising; but it also pays directly in dollars and cents. In a certain city is the home of a large food company. It is not a rhetorical twist to say that you might invert your dinner plate on any portion of the floor of that factory and then eat the food with less liability to get dirt or disease into your system than in the average cheap restaurant; that is simply a statement of solid fact.

One accustomed to old-style methods would question whether such exceeding cleanliness could pay. The fact is well established, however, that the business of this company is highly profitable, and that a great proportion of the profit is directly traceable to its exemplary cleanliness. Disorder and dirt mean waste and waste is expensive. Order is conservation of time and goods; hence order is true economy and adds to the profit account.

Get First Hand Knowledge.

As you proceed with your investigation of "inside conditions" in your store, you will be surprised to find odds and ends of stock piled away, or thrown into odd places—that is, if you go about this yourself with a view to knowing about it first hand. If you leave it to others to do, without careful supervision, you will not learn so much, nor will you know about all that is found. At best, stock left around loosely is idle stock; idle capital; wasted energy. At worst, it is spoilage and therefore indubitable loss.

All this is so obvious and elementary that I should not think of writing it were it not for the fact that grocers are blind to just such conditions to an astonishing degree. You, of course, being somewhat more advanced in ideas than the average grocer, will understand what I mean, and will readily agree with all I have said. Maybe you have already done part, or even all, of the work I have suggested. You will therefore say: "Why, certainly; I understand all that and work my own business on that basis. I know customers are attracted by cleanliness and repelled by disorder."

Value of a Pleased Customer.

Admitting this much then, have I proved my contention—at least so far as I have gone? You admit that customers are influenced by your tidy store. Then is a tidy store good advertising? You will admit that one pleased customer is a good advertisement for you—the best advertisement, we will say. Why? Is it not because she tells her friends that you keep a tidy, attractive store? If you sell her something new, something she has not yet tried, which pleases her, have you not advertised to her and to her neighbors that you are up-to-date? Is it a good thing to have her feel that way about your business and store? To ask the question is to answer it. Very well, then: If it is good for you to influence her and thus influence her neighbors how can you say that you do not believe in advertising? What is advertising, as it is commonly understood, in its more restricted sense? Is it not simply your own indirect telling of these things about your goods and your store to a large circle of readers in much the same way that your pleased customer tells her friends?

And if this is so, is it not then good for you to tell your story broadcast through the medium of printers' ink?

Think it over. I shall have more to say next week.

Manufacturers Advance Prices of Soap

Laundry Soaps Now Quoted at a Figure That Will Practically Render Prohibitive the Retail Price of Six Bars for a Quarter--One of the Old Evils of the Trade Should Now Disappear —High Cost of Raw Materials Responsible for the New Prices—A Comparison of the Profits.

Toronto, Nov. 10.—As the result of an increase in the price of soap, the "six-for-a-quarter" price on the ordinary laundry soaps will in all probability soon be a thing of the past. The new schedule of prices for Ontario and Quebec is as follows:—for one box, and less than five, $4.15; for five boxes $4.15 with freight paid; for ten boxes and upwards, $4.05 with freight paid. As the great majority of grocers generally buy in five or ten box lots, or more, the new basis of prices is $4.05 and $4.15.

All of the laundry soaps are now on the same basis. Formerly the prices for most lines were as follows: Ten boxes and upward, $3.75 with freight paid; five boxes and up to ten, $3.85 with freight paid. Several lines were sold lower than this, but all have been brought up to the same level.

Causes of the Advance.

One has not to look far for the reasons for these higher prices. Raw materials used in the manufacture of soap have gradually increased in price until those who followed the market considered it but a matter of time until an advance would be made by manufacturers. A world shortage of animal fats, besides a scarcity of oils used in soap manufacture, such as cocoanut, cotton seed, palm and others, have greatly increased the cost of soap production, and rendered necessary an advance in prices. Market reports show that the price per lb. of ordinary soap stock, grease and tallow in 1901 was 5¾ cents and has gradually increased to 7⅞ cents at the present time. The price of rosin in New York, 280 lbs. gross, was $4.10 in 1901. It is now quoted at $7.50, an advance of almost 100 per cent. Cocoanut oil per pound in New York ten years ago was 6¼ cents, and the October price this year was from 9½-10 cents. In 1904 cotton seed oil was quoted at 4 cents in the United States, and is now at from 8¼ to 9 cents, in addition to which there is a duty of 20 per cent. coming into Canada.

Reference might be made to various New York manufacturers who some time ago advanced their prices on account of increased cost of production. In some cases the increase amounted to 60 cents a box.

Effect of New Prices.

The new schedule will practically enforce the removal of the "six-for-a-quarter" price. Grocers who formerly bought in five case lots and sold at six bars for twenty-five cents made 32 cents profit on each box. He will just make two cents a box under the new schedule if he sells six bars for twenty-five cents. In other words, taking into consideration the cost of doing business, he will be losing money.

Retailing at five cents straight he will make 85 cents a box, without taking into account the cost of doing business. Under the old price he would have had a splendid profit at five cents a bar, but the demand was almost entirely for the "six." Demands for single bars were few and far between.

When it was rumored some time ago that some change would have to be made either in the price of soap or in the size of the bar, due to higher cost of raw materials, both wholesalers and retailers made strong representations to the manufacturers in favor of increase in the price to such an extent that the practice of selling "six-for-a-quarter" would be done away with. This pratice originated with price-cutters, and had been forced upon the trade generally, with the result that retail profits had become very unsatisfactory.

The new schedule went into effect November 5.

MOVE TO CURTAIL CREDITS.

Montreal Provision Dealers Issue Letter to Retail Trade Announcing Shorter Credit Terms.

Montreal, Nov. 11.—The following letter was recently sent out by 12 wholesale provision houses to the retail trade:

Dear Sir,—All connected with the Produce Trade are familiar with the very limited margin of profit that those engaged in the business have been able to realize, and that the terms of credit which the wholesale trade have been extending to their customers are entirely out of proportion to the small margin of profit under which we are forced to do business.

The wholesale trade are of the opinion that shorter credits will really be of material advantage to the retailer. It will supply a reason for insisting on prompt payment of his accounts, and place the trade generally on a healthier and more substantial basis.

With a view of bringing about an improvement over present conditions, all accounts for goods purchased during the month will become due (and statement rendered) on the 1st of the following month. Failure to settle the account by the 15th of same month will result in no further goods being entered, except upon a c.o.d. basis. This to take effect commencing October 1st.

Our object is not only to collect accounts within a period of time more commensurate with the heavy expenses under which we labor, but also to give our clients an opportunity and a reason for shortening their terms of credit to the consumer, and to insist upon their accounts being paid promptly by their customers.

The effect of this change will result in the retail business being placed on a sounder and more profitable basis.

Hoping we may receive your hearty co-operation in the matter.

DELIVERIES DELAYED.

Express Employees' Strike in New York Affects Certain Shipments of Oysters to this Side of The Line.

The express employees' strike in New York is affecting the delivery of goods from New England cities to Ontario towns and some of the dealers in oysters particularly experience a delay of 24 hours in the shipment of their goods. Attention is called to the matter in order that grocers who notice a delay in any deliveries will understand the situation which will be relieved when the strike is concluded. Shipments originating at New England points are expressed irregularly owing to a strike among the express companys' employees in New York. A great deal of express matter getting into New York is subjected to "cross-town" transfer which necessitates the labor of drivers who are not in the strike. Perishable goods are given a preference but in spite of that, a delay of twenty-four hours is being experienced. It is possible to route some shipments by way of Boston instead of New York but in the majority of instances it increases the through rate 40 to 60 cents a hundred.

FRUITMEN TO BOWL.

Toronto, Nov. 9.—Local wholesale fruitmen have formed a bowling league comprising six teams, which should afford considerable sport during the long winter evenings. The officers elected are: Hon. Pres., Chas. Kimpton; President, D. Spence; Sec.-Treas., J. J. McCabe. Matches will be played every Monday, Wednesday and Saturday evenings, and the schedule will not be concluded until April 8th. Each team plays twenty matches and by the time the finals are in sight there will likely be niches in the bowling hall of fame for some of the local fruitmen. The six captains, who by the way are themselves some bowlers, are Geo. Everist, Jas. Egan, T. Vance, W. B. Stringer, A. McBride and Geo. Olcott. The curtain has already been rung up on the season's fun. Suitable prizes and a trophy are being offered.

INFORMATION FOR BUYERS.

Supplied to the Trade by Sellers.

Messrs. Gunn, Langlois & Co., Montreal, Que., announce an interesting competition. Their idea is to give an incentive to farmers to produce a standard of poultry that will tend to enable Canada to establish a position as one of the foremost producers and exporters of eggs and dressed poultry. They have decided to offed $100 in prizes for the finest shipments in poultry—shipments to consist of either 12 turkeys, 24 chickens, 12 ducks or 12 geese.

PUBLISHED EVERY FRIDAY

NEW SOAP PRICES.

Manufacturers of laundry soaps have announced new schedules for Ontario and Quebec, entailing an advance that will make it necessary for retailers to sell at five cents straight instead of six bars for a quarter. As this means a better profit to the dealer, the change will cause general satisfaction throughout the trade.

The new prices are due to the advanced cost of all materials entering into the manufacture of soap. It has been felt for some time that the price would have to go up or the size of the bar would have to come down. The wholesalers and retailers strongly favored raising the price, and, when the time came, the manufacturers acted accordingly.

Some grocers, expecting higher prices, purchased rather heavily. They will likely put the new price into force at once, and thus get the benefit of the extra profit. This should be done by all retailers without delay.

SUGAR SITUATION.

Easier prices are likely to hold for some time in the sugar market. The total cane crop of the world including Hawaii, Java, Cuba and Louisiana will be 200,000 tons more than last year. The beet sugar production will be about one and one-half millions greater. The total increase will be 10 per cent. as compared with last year, while the normal increase in the consumption is only 4½ per cent. Raw sugar has already broken almost a cent a pound from the highest point. A year ago it was 4.45 cents as against about 3.87 at present.

Granulated sugar, following raw, has gradually come down until it is now at $4.70 for standard granulated, on Montreal basis. Cuba is expecting so much more sugar than last year that she is offering her new raws at about 2¼ cents against 2¾ cents last year. United States authorities expect sugar to drop to at least 4½ cents. On the basis of 2¼ cents for raw sugar they say granulated should sell there at 4½ cents.

Just how low it will go in Canada is merely conjectural. Another decline is looked for by jobbers but none of them have expressed an opinion that it will reach a 4½ cent basis.

GOOD CROP OF BEANS.

The bean crop in Western Ontario is now estimated at between 900,000 and 1,000,000 bushels. In 1909 the crop amounted to 850,000 bushels so it looks as if bean prices ought to be easier than a year ago providing the increase in consumption does not more than balance the better crop.

Some growers are threshing as high as 25 bushels to the acre. Buyers have been paying $1.50 for good quality beans or on a strictly hand-picked basis $1.60 per bushel, delivered at the elevators.

POOR SALESMANSHIP.

What a lot of salesmen there are who seem to think that price is the only thing a customer thinks of. When they present an article for inspection, their first words are "That is $1.80; here is a better one for $2.40."

In a country general store last week a customer asked for a half pint of floor stain to touch up a small space.

The clerk offered a line selling at 15 cents, but it was not put up attractively and the customer asked:

"Haven't you so-and-so's?" naming the manufacturer of one of the best advertised paints.

"No, we only carry their paints," was the clerk's reply, "but, anyway, their stain would cost you 25 cents."

Here was a customer ready to pay for quality and the clerk, instead of encouraging the desire, offered the inducement of cheapness in order to make his sale.

Most people buy things, not so much because they need them as because they want them and, that being the case, they are more interested in getting just what they want than in a few cents difference in the price. Tell them about the style, quality, desirability of the article—make them want it, and steer clear of the price until they ask for it.

If you follow this rule, you will find the total of your sales increasing surprisingly.

CHECK UP BEFORE RECEIPTING.

Our attention has been called to a practice which must be classed among the careless details incident to lax methods of conducting business, namely, the neglect or failure on receipt of a bill of goods from a truckman or expressman to receipt the bill without first checking it up. This is one of the most careless practices entering into the details of mercantile business Of course, under the law a truckman or a common carrier is supposed to be legally responsible.

The theory is that he can be held responsible through process of the law for any damage to goods or loss of goods, but after having signed a receipt to the effect that so many packages or bundles or boxes or cases have been received it is a pretty difficult matter to re-open the case and charge the carrier with having delivered less than the receipt called for. There is nothing much more conclusive than a receipted bill, and the way to avoid carelessness, mistakes and misunderstandings is to see that the thing is right in the first place.

In other words, do not receipt for goods without first checking them up and do not sign anything without having first carefully read it and making sure that you understand it. Many a man has signed a document without reading it, or, at least, after having read it only very casually, and afterwards found that he had signed an order for goods or a promissory note. Never be in too great a hurry to give proper care to your business.

HOME TRADING.

One publisher, who has adopted the plan of addressing a letter each week to some section of his readers, is pressing home the importance of organization. Of the women he asks: "Will the women of this town take part in a campaign to encourage home trading? If they will join in the fight, organize, and use their powerful influence in this good cause they will do more good for suffering humanity than the W.C.T.U., missionary societies, ladies' aids, etc., have or can accomplish."

Now that the newspapers are taking up this matter, the merchants can give significance to the movement by supplying actual instances as to the merit of home values, facilitating comparisons where possible, and otherwise demonstrating the justice of their position. All appearance of coercion must, of course, be avoided, or the adoption of any policy which would give to people the impression that they were being herded or hounded. It must be done by wide-open co-operation which will bring the best interests of the community home to every person capable of conviction.

Invoice and Actual Costs Compared Profits on Sugar When Weight of Sack and Paper is Considered—Shrinkage on Cheese and Biscuits — Shortages Observed in Weight of Meats—Actual Weights Below Those of Invoice—A Believer in Maintenance of Prices on Staple Articles.

By H. R. Daniels.

How many merchants in determining the selling price of an article, figure on the actual cost? Possibly not one in ten. Either carelessness or timidity or a presentiment that somehow or other the profits will take care of themselves, seems to be the only explanation of this paradoxical attitude. And paradoxical it certainly is. For it is inconceivable that any dealer would be satisfied with a gross profit of 10 per cent. upon an article that constitutes about one tenth of his annual sales—this being a fair estimate of the average gross profit on sugar.

I have spoken of actual cost; for there is an appreciable difference between the invoice price of a certain article and the actual cost of that article laid down in the store. I am aware that this matter has been touched upon in a casual way at various times, but few seem to realize the gravity of the situation without a close and searching introspective look at their own business.

Figuring Profits on Sugar.

Take yellow sugars for example. Suppose the market quotations to be $5 in hundred weight bags. Further, assume that 18 lbs. are retailed for $1.00. What is your profit? At first glance it would appear that you are making 55c or about 10 per cent. on sales. This, however, is more apparent than real. First, because allowance must be made for the sack which will weigh about 14 ounces; secondly, (and this will be a surprise to many grocers) the paper lining will, with moisture absorbed from contents, weigh about 14 oz. more. This means that 98 lbs. of sugar will be a liberal estimate of what the grocer is able to retail over his counter. This, with 5c added for freight and cartage, will give our profit percentages quite a different value and turn a 10 per cent. margin—too small under the most favorable conditions—into a total gross profit of 41c or about 8 per cent.

Cheese and Biscuit Shrinkage.

There are other lines upon which the experiment may be tried with equally startling results. Cheese is invariably short 1 to 1½ lbs. for the reason that the wholesales charge the grocer with the weights marked on the package which were originally placed there by the maker when the cheese was new. The same may be said of fancy biscuits which are usually packed and weighed while still warm and containing a maximum quantity of moisture. All fruits, raisins, currants, apricots, prunes, etc., come in the same category. Shrinkage must necessarily take place in these goods though this loss may be reduced by storing in cellar or basement.

In the case of goods coming in glass containers, it is impossible to estimate the cost beforehand. In a four dozen package of jams or jellies the breakage may vary from one to four or five jars. All glass goods such as lamp chimneys, lantern globes, fruit jars, etc., are subject to heavy breakage. With fruit jars, 5 per cent. would be a conservative estimate of the loss sustained by breakage.

Leakage to Guard Against.

In the majority of the instances cited above, the shrinkage in values, while very real, is not always readily discernible, and, as is the case with canned goods where an odd package spoils from time to time, little consideration is given to the aggregate. Of course, some leakages are entirely unnecessary and can be guarded against by a little attention to incoming goods. In this connection may be mentioned meats. All invoices for this class of goods should be carefully checked and any shortages in weight charged against same. To-day, the writer has checked an invoice for 36 lbs. of smoked roll, 10 ounces short; 37 lbs. bacon, 10 ozs. short; a barrel of smoked roll, invoiced at 220 lbs. was discovered to be 5½ lbs. short.

Enough has been advanced here to indicate the necessity of closer attention to selling prices. The cause of so many small margins in the grocery business to-day, is chiefly owing to the efforts of men, new at the game, whose ideas of getting trade are limited to cutting the price on some staple article. If leaders must be given, by all means give them, but let them be from special lines which come rather under the heading of luxuries.

Plea for Individualism.

Finally, get away from the idea that it is necessary for you to meet every price which some ill-advised competitor may be pleased to make. Let the element of individualism predominate in your business, and make your store so attractive, and your service so perfect that the public simply can't help patronizing you. You will thereby succeed, yourself, and discourage others from attempting to gain trade by such unbusinesslike methods. Selling goods that are not profitable is something that shouldn't be.

INFORMATION FOR BUYERS.

Supplied to the Trade by Sellers.

The St. Lawrence Sugar Refining Co., are putting up Extra Standard Granulated sugar in 20-lb. cotton bags. This makes a very attractive package, saves labor in weighing and parcelling, and loss which sometimes occurs in the giving of over-weight. Then the sugar of the St. Lawrence Sugar Refining Co., is made only of pure cane sugar and is 100 per cent. pure.

Last week one of the display windows of Bain & Adams, retail grocers, Hamilton, Ont., contained a beautiful display of products of Wagstaffe, Ltd. Fruits in glass were handsomely shown in a show case, the color effect being really beautiful. Grouped around the show case were other products of this firm. It goes without saying that the window attracted a good deal of attention.

The E. D. Marceau Co., Montreal, have installed a Lambert peanut roasting machine of the latest pattern. Peanuts are roasted uniformly, and, owing to the careful manner in which they are automatically handled, they are very little damaged in the process.

Wm. Clark, of Montreal, manufacturer of food specialties, has begun to push vigorously his Chateau Brand of Concentrated Soups. Tinned soups usually retail at two for a quarter, but Mr. Clark is making a price which permits the dealer to retail the soups at only 10 cents a tin, and make a good profit. Advertising to the public is being placed in newspapers and street cars. The copy is attractive and persuasive, and should stimulate an excellent demand for Clark's Chateau Brand Concentrated Soups.

Walter Baker & Co., chocolate and cocoa manufacturers Dorchester, Mass., have purchased the factory in St. Henry, Montreal, which was formerly occupied by R. E. T. Pringle, and will alter the four story building in such a way as will best adapt the 55,000 square feet of space to the needs of their business. It is unlikely that any manufacturing will be done in Canada for at least six months. For several years this company has had an office in Montreal, and their business has developed to the extent of making it necessary for them to have a factory here which will enable them to sell their goods at a more attractive price, in view of the fact that they will not have to pay the heavy duty at present demanded on these lines when brought into Canada in a manufactured state.

The Glocester, Mass., fishermen say that the mackerel this year were a dismal failure. The total catch of salt mackerel off the coast is estimated at about 3,200 barrels, compared with 16,206 barrels in 1909, and 20,426 in 1908. The catch of frsh mackerel is claimed to be almost as disappointing.

QUEBEC MARKETS

POINTERS—
Sugar—Prices equalized.
Evaporated Apples.—Firm at advance.
Coffees—Higher.

Montreal, Nov. 10.

After rather an unlooked for wait the Canada sugar prices have been reduced to meet the lower prices quoted by others. There is a very weak condition all through the sugar market, and particularly in the raw. It has only been partially supported by the fact that the sugars being melted by the refiners were very high priced, and naturally had to be supported as much as possible. Declining market is looked for any day, as the raw market is weaker by three shillings than at this time last year, and yet the refined is higher than last year.

Canned goods are going with a rush, even at the high level prevailing. It is evident that dealers are taking no chances of a further advance, being pretty well assured that if any additional movement takes place it will be upward.

Taking the markets as a whole they are high and firm, and seem to be booked to continue that way.

Trade is good and promises to offer one of the best for years at this season.

Sugar.—At the end of last week the Canada Refinery reduced their prices 5c to meet the current quotations. This became necessary on account of the large arrivals of foreign sugars in this market. Not only does the market continue weak, but it does not seem possible that prices can long maintain even the present low levels. How soon any change will take place is hard to say. It all depends on the way the raw market shapes and how keen the foreign competition is. At any rate the refiners are hoping against hope that there will be a stronger raw market in the near future.

Syrups and Molasses.—Country buyers are evidently beginning to lay in their winter supplies of syrups, as the trade in this line is picking up fast. City buying has been fairly brisk also. No changes in price.

Molasses trade has been disappointing to both importers and jobbers this season, and they are unable to account for it entirely. The only explanation seems to be the increased demand for syrups. The market is dull and weak.

Tea.—There is a good demand for the cheaper grades of blacks and China greens. Also there is a good demand for the better grades of Japans. Other lines are somewhat dull, and trade as a whole is about the same as last week.

Coffee.—Coffees are firm and high throughout, and there is a distinct shortage in Santos. Dealers here say that the market is too high to be reasonable, but still it continues firm and even on an advancing basis. As pointed out recently in these columns, the visible supply is more than sufficient to supply the world for a year if the coming crop was an entire failure. Therefore it seems to be a pretty certain conclusion that speculation and the Brazilian government are responsible for the whole situation.

Spices.—There is a high and advancing market in spices of all lines, but more particularly in cloves, which are now up to 30. Shortage of supplies is the explanation given. Also there has been a heavy and continuous demand all summer for spices, and this has materially strengthened the market.

Flaxseed is high at an advance of 3c over former quotations. Cream of tartar is scarce, and confirmation of the early reports of a short French production has sent up prices.

Business in all lines is booming, and it looks as if the year would be a banner one for the manufacturer.

Dried Fruits.—The arrival of the Jacona, the second Mediterranean fruit boat, relieved the dried fruit market, coming as she did on a bare market. Her cargo was considerably smaller than last year, and as a result was snapped up almost immediately. The market hardly felt them. As a result there seems a certainty of higher levels all winter than last year.

The only fault found with the new arrivals is in their size. They are slightly smaller in average size than before. Still the quality is good, and beggars cannot afford to be choosers.

Reports from New York state that the same applies to their market, except that California lines are more plentiful.

Nuts.—So far very few new crop nuts are in, but shelled almonds have arrived. They are quoted high in the primary market, and are firm to the retailer.

The approach of cold weather has made a good increase in demand for all lines, owing perhaps to the increase in the making of home made candies. At this time of year it is astonishing, the amount consumed in this way.

Stocks are pretty low here, and all lines promise to be high through the winter.

Evaporated Apples.—The quality of goods arriving is good, but as far as quantity goes there is but little. In spite of the high price there is a good trade being done, and dealers are sanguine as to the future.

The recent destruction by fire of a large lot of apples in Belleville is only an added influence in shaping the market, which is already high.

Beans and Peas.—Beans are in good demand though the price is somewhat weaker. Supplies are supposed to be somewhat light, but still there is a fairly adequate one.

Peas are quiet at the same prices.

Rice and Tapioca.—Tapioca stocks are light and as a result prices are high. There is no change to the retailer, but in the primary markets the prices are up.

Rice is gradually becoming a demand for the better grade, i.e. Patnas as against Rangooms. Evidently people are beginning to see what there is in it for the retailer to sell the better grades.

CANNED GOODS

MONTREAL.—Evidently dealers are coming to the conclusion that there is to be no weakening in the prices at present ruling for vegetables and fruits. Buying has increased largely, and winter supplies are being laid in.

In fish the demand is good and about evenly distributed. Of course salmon are practically exhausted, so do not figure largely. If there were any to be had they would form a very important factor.

Meats are selling very well at former prices.

TORONTO.—Canned goods show no signs of weakness. One enquiry received by a local firm this week was for 3,000 cases from the west, practically asking the holders of the stock to name their price. Gallon tomatoes are quoted at from $3.60 to $4.00, showing how strong they are. The chief weakness with the tomato market is the scarcity of supplies. Salmon is also decidedly firm with advancing prices for the second grades. There is a lively demand for canned goods just now.

ONTARIO MARKETS

POINTERS—

Cream of Tartar and Cloves — Very firm.

Syrup.—Slightly firmer.

Nuts.—Further advances.

Toronto, Nov. 10th.

The market continues with the firmness that has characterized it for weeks past. Jobbers report very satisfactory business and the trade in general seems to be in a good condition. There has been a feeling that sugar prices which have not been uniform were likely to change this week. The raw market is still weak and it is believed by some jobbers that the price of refined is liable to another reduction in the near future.

With the arrival of new Hallowee dates a decrease of a half cent on present quotations will be made. The dried fruit market continues firm in practically every line. Raisins are a trifle easier.

In canned goods there is a firmness in practically every line. Tomatoes seem to be almost off the market. At least it is stated on the street that it is next to impossible to get quotations.

Sugar.—Prices are in the same position as a week ago although an equalization has been made. The market is weak, according to reports. Prices on refined are unchanged, but the condition of the raw market is considered to warrant even a lower price.

Syrups and Molasses.—There is a slightly stronger feeling in corn syrups. On the street there is just the hint of the possibility of higher prices although they may not be very proximate. Corn is higher which increases the belief in the trend of the market. Demand for molasses is only fair.

Dried Fruits.—The wholesale trade all report sustained good business. Second steamer dates will arrive about the 17th or 18th of this month. The first shipment is now practically exhausted. Prices for new Hallowee dates for second shipment will be ½ cent less than present quotations. Orders for Christmas goods are coming in freely and the trade promises to be a healthy one.

Altogether the market continues firmly with but few exceptions.

Nuts.—Cables received this week show further advances in new crop shelled walnuts of two cents per pound on the opening prices. Shelled almonds have also been advanced in Spain. The nut market gives every indication of firmness. Stocks are moving out freely, and so far the new and higher prices do not seem to have been a deterrent to purchasers.

Cream of tartar is another item that is reaching a high price and is very likely to be further advanced before the new year. Peppers are holding firmly.

Evaporated Apples—New stock high.

Winnipeg, November, 1910. — During the past week, the output has increased enormously in a wide range of goods. Merchants have evidently come to the conclusion that now is the time to buy, and they are laying in a winter stock which is taxing local distributors to ship.

Sugar.—Local wholesalers report the sugar market stiffer, and there is no indication at present that further reductions will be made. There is a splendid trade going on in all icing, powdered and lump sugar, and this will no doubt continue for some time. Montreal and B.C. granulated in barrels is firm at $5.35.

Figs are expected to arrive next week, and the price is said to be firm. New dates have advanced, and the quotation is 6½c in bulk this week. Higher prices are expected for prunes. Habit vs. Business

It is just habit that keeps most grocers selling 30c. tea, and it is sheer business recklessness to sell the 25c. stuff. You will be surprised to see how readily your customers will buy the better grades when you ask them. In the first nine months of this year the sales of the 40c. grade of Red Rose Tea increased in Ontario alone 30.85 per cent. Most of your customers will gladly buy the 40c. grade when they know how good it is. Why not persuade them to try a package? When you do you can settle down to the business enjoyment of larger profit and more satisfied customers.

BRITISH COLUMBIA MARKETS.

Vancouver, Nov. 9.—Two prominent and unusual features mark the trade in Vancouver this week. One is the big drop in sugar, from $5.80 to $5.45. More than one grocer not expecting this got caught even on the morning of the reduction, having ordered without asking the price.

The other feature is the absence of premium bacon. There is none to be had in the city, except in one or two instances of dealers having an odd piece or two on hand. Wholesalers are out and have been for three or four days, and many dealers have not been able to meet the demand. This is the first time this has happened. It gives a fine opportunity for all other kinds of bacon, and advantage is being taken to get rid of various brands. The price for premium has been hovering around 31 and 31½ cents. It has not advanced with the scarcity, because it cannot be had at any price. It is expected that the market will be relieved in a day or two.

There is no change in butter, Chilliwack and Edenbank creamery jobbing at 40 cents. The quality in instances, however, is not up to the usual high standard.

New Laid Eggs Bringing High Prices

Fifty Cents a Dozen is a Fairly Common Figure, and in Some Places as High as Seventy Has Been Quoted — Hams and Bacon at Another Reduction in Toronto, and Market is Still Weak—Cheese Factories Are Being Closed, and in Some Places Slightly Higher Quotations Rule — Poultry Prices are Easier and Supplies are Liberal.

There is still an easy feeling in the provision market and in some places prices are even lower than those of last week. At country points live hogs have been quoted as low as $6 and the feeling in this market seems to be a little easier than a week ago. Receipts are pretty liberal and the demand in some lines has fallen off to some extent.

The price of eggs soars steadily. New laids are exceedingly scarce and while fifty cents a dozen is a common price, in some places seventy cents is demanded in at least one or two Canadian cities. Owing to the scarcity of the fresh variety, demand has been supplied mostly from storage stocks and will continue from that source for some months. An all-the-year-round hen would be welcomed by the masses during the winter months.

The cheese factories are suspending operations after a long and almost uniformly good year. In spite of the large exports of cream, the manufacture of cheese and butter has been a big item, surpassing even that of last year. The factory reports will be soon compiled and the figures should give evidence of a splendid year. Butter is a little firmer and it is expected that the time is not distant when higher prices will be reached. The production has remained at a big figure practically right up to the present.

Poultry seems a little easier. Supplies have been very liberal, but the demand is, if anything, not quite so heavy. Markets on the whole are satisfactory.

MONTREAL.

Provisions.—There is little change in the provision trade, except that there is a generally good increase in the demand for all lines. Hogs are coming in quite freely, at last week's prices.

Butter.—New York buyers are in Montreal picking up odd lots, and this influence has had much to do with firming the market. Though no change has taken place in prices here, in the country they are higher.

A recent meeting at Cowansville was held with a view to forwarding the interests of Canadians as regards the exportation of cream. A resolution was passed which was to be forwarded to the government, making the suggestion that reciprocity, or rather equality in the butter and cream rates be made. What effect this will have is as yet rather problematical.

Receipts for the week are 5,199 packages as against 6,538 same week last year. For the season they are 390,077 packages as against 346,306 same season last year.

Cheese.—Factories are closing in all parts of the country, and as a result supplies are dropping off. Prices are firmer by ½c here, and there is a distinct probability of their being even higher.

Receipts for the week are 44,597 boxes as against 54,448 same week last year. For the season they are 1,860,929 boxes as against 1,850,728 same season last year.

Eggs.—Eggs are already from 3c to 5c higher than last week, and if the present demand continues there will undoubtedly be a shortage weeks before the same time last year. New laids are now bringing 45c a dozen, and the others in proportion. Evidently people are deciding that they must have eggs at any price.

Receipts for the week are light, only 1,659 cases, as against 1,548 same week last year. For the season they are 177,236 cases as against 182,137 same season last year.

Provisions—Another decline of one cent per pound is in effect this week on hams and bacon. The market has been easy and regained none of the ground lost recently. At country points a wide variance in prices for live hogs obtains. In some places they are down as low as $6.00, but these places are few. Demand is keeping up fairly well for this season. If the market continues in this direction those who have been decrying against high meat prices will find themselves without reason to grumble.

"BORDO" CHOCOLATES

From the very start have had the warm support of the merchants. This, of course, is due simply to the fact that the retailer who saw and tasted "BORDO" recognized their exceptional worth, and the ready market they would create for themselves.

We want the merchants who do not handle "BORDO" to consider this—Is it better to stock a variety of brands which are all very similar, both as to composition and flavor, or to stock a brand of proven worth, the ever increasing popularity of which means a big profit to the retailer,—an article customers will ask for by name, and recommend their friends to ask for?

A customer who asks for "BORDO" will not be content with some unknown brand which he is told is "just as good." He wants "BORDO," and if he asks for them in a store where they are not sold, he will go where they are sold.

It is just this way that customers are lost or gained. The merchant who is not selling "BORDO" is missing profitable custom.

If you have not seen or tasted "BORDO" Chocolate we will gladly send you a sample and free particulars, if you will write.

The Steady, Increasing Demand

FOR

POSTUM

since it was put upon the market, 15 years ago, is the natural result of the vast benefit it has done thousands, yes, millions of persons in all parts of the world.

Continuous, truthful advertising has pointed out the injury coffee does to many; and an easy, pleasant way to dismiss coffee ills.

People buy postum and become steady users because they recognize its beneficial effects; and the grocer who supplies the demand enjoys the excellent profit—generally better than on coffee—and the sale of Postum is guaranteed.

Some Mills Quote Flour at Reduction

State That Price of First Patents is Down to $5.60, But Eastern Millers Declare That They are Not in Sympathy With The Movement—Market is Steady and Quiet, and Next Move is Obscure—Shipments From Canada and United States Show an Increase for Last Week—Nothing Eventful in Cereal Market.

Information regarding the flour market during the early part of this week was somewhat conflicting. A difference of ten cents existed between the price quoted by eastern and western mills, with the lower figure representing the latter. Last week it was stated that from the condition of the wheat market, with prices weakening, it seemed that if those quotations were maintained or still further reduced, that flour would in all probability follow. In the meantime the wheat market regained a certain amount of strength, but is apparently back to its former position. While some report that the flour market is steady, and is even inclining upward, others claim that it is weaker, and support their statements by announcing a decline of ten cents for top patents. Just what way the general movement will be, if there is any, is known only to the fates that guide this peculiar market. If this decline is taken as any criterion, then a general reduction may be looked for, but there is no surface evidence that would indicate that movement, whatever tendencies there may be deeper at work. The Winnipeg market has lent considerable strength to the wheat market, and has been largely responsible for the recent reaction. World's exports have been less than those of a week ago by less than over a million bushels. Indications still point to a big crop in Argentina, and the harvest is expected to be under way in a week or so.

This week stocks of grain in store at Fort William and Port Arthur have increased by one and a half million bushels over last week, and by two million bushels over last year, when the stocks amounted to a little over seven million bushels. Last week the shipments exceeded two and a half million bushels. It is well known that much grain of late has been shipped to Buffalo.

To-day's increase in the Canadian visible supply was little short of a million bushels, and United States grain men were unable to understand the advance on the Canadian mart, where the December option finished strong at 90⅛c, as against Saturday's closing price, recorded at 89⅝c, a figure which, at the end of last week, was thought to be pretty high. Trading at Winnipeg was not of record proportions and fluctuations were only small, a very small gap separating the highest and lowest quotations of the day.

The ground gained on Monday was practically lost on Tuesday.

Canadian visible wheat supply this week was estimated at 11,969,000 bushels, an advance of almost a million bushels over last week, when the figures were 11,031,000 bushels. Last year the wheat visible was calculated to be 12,099,000 bushels. Canadian oats visible this week was 8,392,000 bushels, as compared with 8,508,000 bushels last week, and 2,630,000 bushels last year.

With the exception of the preceding week, the exports of wheat and flour last week from the United States and Canada were the largest on record during the present season. Canadian holders of wheat wish for the early inauguration of an export demand and offers within reach. In absence of such a demand, accurate statistics are interesting.

Complaints are still heard of the gap between Old Country offers and Canadian quotations.

MONTREAL.

Flour—With wheat advancing and on a firmer basis, the effect on the flour market has been very beneficial, stopping temporarily at least the declining tendency the market has shown for some time past. Millers are hoping that the conditions will not tend to weaken flours more than they are at present, but as yet are somewhat uncertain as to the effect being more than temporary.

Rolled oats.—Spot stocks of oats are decreasing, and although no change is evident in prices as yet, there is undoubtedly a silghtly firmer feeling in the market for rolled oats. Also export demand has been very good lately, and that has caused a better feeling.

Flour—Receipts of grain locally are said to have improved, although they are still not as heavy as they should be. Millers do not look for lower prices in any direction. They claim that even now some of the work is being carried on at a loss. There is no general news here of a decline in first patents, although there is authority for the statement that some western mills are quoting at the reduction.

CHRISTIE

A plain business talk to our partners, the Grocers of Canada, about stable profits

Have you ever figured out the source of the only profit worth while in the grocery business? Take your pencil and do it right now.

Transient business does not amount to much.

Your few score or few hundred dependable customers—mainly your particular buyers—make up your paying trade.

They are precisely the customers who make your good will a valuable asset.

These customers insist on the best groceries—inferior goods will not satisfy them.

If they want biscuits they demand

CHRISTIE BISCUITS

because it's a matter of common knowledge that Christie Biscuits are "The Purest of all Pure Foods."

Now, isn't it as plain as day that the manufacturer of high-grade groceries is your best friend? His reputation works for you day after day—keeps on working for you even on Sundays and holidays.

HIGH STANDARD GOODS ARE THE ONLY SOURCE OF STABLE PROFITS IN THE GROCERY BUSINESS.

The superiority of Christie Biscuits is conceded—has never been seriously questioned.

You know that, your customers know it—more of them will know it. Whether your best customer wants soda biscuits, sweet or fancy biscuits, she invariably asks for Christie's.

The name is a guarantee of biscuit purity and perfection. And the fact remains that

"Christie Biscuits sell more than Biscuits."

CAN YOU IMAGINE IT

10,500

BARRELS A DAY

Just think of all the pleased users it must take to make possible this enormous capacity.

A big output is a mighty useful consideration—if the flour is a sure pleaser.

Because the heavier your output the more cooks and bakers will use your stuff; the more people you have decrying your quality in case of failure.

So that 10,500 barrels a day simply must mean a vast army of satisfied users buying and re-buying FIVE ROSES over the retail counter every weekday in the year.

Because, don't you see, if it were unsatisfactory, we would have to make less and less as consumers "got wise" to big claims and small performance.

But, Brother Grocer, for twenty-one years now we are making more and more. Yours are not merely satisfied, but pleased patrons.
Making it easy to hold old custom.

10,500 barrels make 21,000 bags of 98 lbs.; or 42,000 bags of 49 lbs.; or 84,000 twenty-fours; or 147,000 fourteens; or 294,000 sevens; or 2,067,000 pounds of good flour.

Are YOU getting your share of these sales, these pleased patrons, these permanent profits?

Navel Oranges and New Lemons Offered

Fruit Dealers Quote Prices on New Sicilian Lemons — First Navel Oranges Expected This Week — Grapes are Becoming less Plentiful and Show an Increase in Price — Apples are Still Scarce, Particularly Fancy Stocks—Potatoes are in About the Same Position as Last Week — Tomatoes and Pears are Passing.

From all the markets in eastern Canada reports are coming in to the effect that apples are scarce and are demanding a high price. It is also stated that good fruit is difficult to obtain, but that supplies of an inferior grade are fairly plentiful. This seems to cover the general situation. Not only has the apple crop been almost a dismal failure, but growers in far too many places neglected the ordinary precautions which safeguard the quality of the ripened fruit. In those districts where attention was paid to spraying, a good quality of fruit was obtained, but it is easy to find an explanation for the inferiority that is characteristic of the most of the fruit now sold.

Trade in general while good for this season is suffering a sort of relapse resulting from the rush and bustle of the summer months. New oranges from California and lemons from Sicily are expected by wholesalers this week. Florida and Jamaica oranges have been meeting the demand, but the new navels will be welcomed. Tomatoes are becoming scarcer as are also pears. Grapes are quoted at an advance and are really becoming scarcer. Demand for Malaga and Almeria varieties is fair and promises well for the future.

MONTREAL.

Green Fruits.—Plums and peaches are off the market, except for a few scattering lots. The market has been a fairly average one for deciduous fruits this season, and toward the end showed a marked improvement.

Apples are scarce, that is good ones are. Those appearing are at best only seconds, and the average are not even up to that grade.

Trade in general is rather quiet, though fair business has been reported from some dealers. The quantity of fruit appearing is said to be too large.

Vegetables.—Large arrivals of garlic lately have weakened the price 50c. Not only that, but selling has dropped in this line to a considerable extent, thus weakening matters still more.

Tomatoes are scarce, and higher by 50c. Hot house are beginning to come in at 20c.

Corn is exhausted, or so nearly so that the quantity is negligible.

Spinach is slightly higher in the country, and somewhat scarce locally.

Trade has not been anything out of the ordinary this week. Just a medium demand for standard lines.

TORONTO.

Green Fruits.—New lemons are expected to arrive this week on the first steamer from Messina and will be quoted at about four dollars a case. They are coming on a market that is practically stripped bare, especially as far as lemons of quality are concerned. It is likely that the new stocks will show good condition. Owing to the scarcity of fruit, lemon prices were beginning to soar all over the country, and high prices were ruling in some places. The new arrivals will relieve the situation.

There seems to be a good demand for oranges. Valencias are practically done. There is possibly a small quantity left, but they are bringing high prices. Florida and Jamaica fruit are being most freely offered and fancy stocks are in most demand. The first navels of the season are expected this week and will be close on the first shipments to the eastern cities in the United States. Much is expected of the new California fruit, particularly for the holiday demand, and there is every prospect of a heavy demand being felt. Apples are holding firmly, but seem to be offered more liberally this week. Prices are about the same, but are a little easier on those that are sold in basket lots. Grapes are quoted at a higher price, and are still offered pretty freely, though of course the decline in quantity is noticeable. There is considerable demand for Almeria and Malaga grapes. There are still a few pears on the market, but otherwise the home grown fruits of that kind are practically done.

Vegetables.—There is a steady and easy demand for general lines of vegetables. Potatoes are not changing much although reports of damaged crops are more frequent. Tomatoes are still offered, but are becoming less and less plentiful. The vegetable market just now is inclined to be quiet and as home supplies are becoming exhausted preparations will have to be made for importing supplies for the winter demand. This is still distant but it points to a change that is bound to be felt before long.

Fresh Fruits.—Apples are the big leaders on the market here just now, a few pears are moving still, and the trade in cranberries, oranges and bananas is excellent. A heavy season has just closed on the grape market. Prices are normal and consumers seem to be satisfied this year with both quality and prices.

A BLOOD GRAPE FRUIT.

Among the grape fruit offerings in New York recently was a decided novelty in the shape of a Cuban hybrid called a "Ruby Blood." It was a grape fruit crossed with a blood orange. The conformation, size, etc., were a true grape fruit, but the flesh had a pinkish tinge and blended with the grape fruit flavor could be discerned without difficulty the true orange taste.

Fish - Oysters

Supplies of Fish Arriving More Freely

Situation Relieved to a Certain Extent by More Favorable Weather Permitting Larger Catches—Toronto Prices Show an Advance in Some Lines—It is Not Expected That the Recent Improvement Will Have Any Effect on Prices Which Are Likely to Hold Firmly—Fishermen Preparing for Smelt Harvest

Although there are many conflicting reports there is no doubt that fish is arriving pretty freely, and no fear of a famine is now felt. Halibut is plentiful, both fresh and frozen, and already some frozen codfish have arrived. Haddock and haddies have been short for a while, but now the output is near normal, and inside of a few days it will be forgotten that there ever was a scarcity.

Conditions in the green cod market are far from being satisfactory as regards supply. A heavy shortage is looked for. Luckily, however, the demand is very slow.

Bulk and shell oysters are in good demand, and are bringing good prices. On account of the express company employes being on strike in New York city, the bulk oyster business has been demoralized for the last few days. It is now improving, though the margin of profit is less.

A prominent dealer in fish said recently: "The last returns show that for twelve months the industry produced in value over twenty-five million dollars, probably thirteen millions of which was exported, leaving about twelve million dollars' worth to be consumed at home. Of this twenty-five million dollars, over sixteen million is credited to the Atlantic, made up mostly of codfish, haddock, mackerel, lobsters, salmon and herring.

"The increased consumption of fish is largely due to the development of transportation facilities, enabling the product to reach the consumer in a fresh state. From 1869 to 1908 the five principal sea fisheries have yielded in value: Codfish, $146,500,980; salmon, $106,618,615; lobsters, $91,575,954, and mackerel, $49,735,288.

"The industry employs over 85,000 persons and has grown in value from $10,754,997 in 1875, to $25,451,000 in 1908, the date of the latest published Blue Book."

NOVA SCOTIA.

Halifax, Nov. 9.

The receipt of fresh fish on the local market during the past week were small. Boisterous weather on the banks has greatly hampered fishing operations, and all the vessels returning report small catches. Halibut is very scarce and the few fish landed here this week were quickly bought up. The fish sold at 17 cents per pound retail, the highest price paid for halibut in these parts for some years. There has been no change in the price of cod and haddock. A few mackerel of fair size have been taken, but the quantity was only sufficient for the local demand. The wholesale price of the fish was from 10 to 15 cents each according to the size. The mackerel fishery is about closed for this year.

Smelts are now coming on the market in small quantities and they are in good demand. The first run is small, but the quality will improve later on. On the local market these fish are sold by the bunch, there being about one dozen in a string, and the wholesale price ranges from 10 to 12 cents per bunch.

The salt fish prices continue to rule firmly. About 1,200 quintal of cod arrived here yesterday from shore ports.

Oyster fishing in Prince Edward Island has been greatly retarded by unfavorable weather. Good prices are ruling. Curtain Island oysters are selling on the shore from $9 to $10 per barrel, and rough Malpeques at $8.

ONTARIO.

Toronto, Nov. 10.—With the exception of a few Lake Erie whitefish that are still coming in supplies are becoming more of frozen fish. It will not be long now until practically all fresh fish arrive frozen. Higher prices prevail on Acadia tablets, shredded cod, and the crates of 1 lb., 2 lb., and 3 lb. boxes. Altogether it is a marked advance and is somewhat of a general indication of the fish market. The demand for these goods has not struck its rapid stride yet. Locally demand clings largely to fresh fish yet, but the other varieties are beginning to come under the demand. Trade in oysters is brisk.

NEW BRUNSWICK.

St. John, Nov. 9.—Better catches of cod and haddock relieved the local fish situation somewhat last week. The improvement was the result of finer weather, the fishermen making the most of their opportunity. A few chicken halibut are coming in, as well as a small quantity of mackerel, smelt and pickerel. The former are very scarce again and the dealers are depending nearly altogether on frozen stock. Some small herring have been on the market. Frozen halibut and salmon are about the only other fish now offered, except, of course, the usual variety of smoked and pickled goods.

Salt cod are quoted at $3 to $4.60, according to size; pickled herring, $2.75 per half barrel and $5.25 per barrel; pickled shad, $8 to $11 per barrel.

News from Chatham says: "The smelt fishermen are already making preparations and plans for the expected harvest of the little fish. It is stated by those directly interested that there will be more nets set this year than ever before on the Miramichi.

"Snelts are plentiful in the river just now, several line fishermen having made good hauls during the past week. If such a condition continues to exists until after the ice makes, the fishermen expect to reap bountiful returns.

"Speaking of prices, a dealer said to-day that it was impossible to make any forecast, though the trade in fresh fish in New York, Boston, Chicago and other points where large sales are made is in a flourishing condition. Conditions change so quickly, however, that it is impossible to make any estimate of what conditions may be by the time local people have smelts to ship."

QUEBEC.

Montreal, Nov. 9.—Although the fish market is now receiving somewhat better supplies than during the past few weeks, still there is sure to be a fairly high market at the best this winter. High prices are the order of the day in practically all lines.

Among those recently advanced are the lines of boneless cod, which are materially higher, differing in the different lines.

Halibut and haddock are coming in more freely, but not as yet in sufficient quantity to cause any weakening in the market.

Lake fish are arriving in quantity.

BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Vancouver, B.C., Nov. 9.—The Flamingo with 150,000 pounds and the Manhattan with 100,000 pounds of halibut arrived this week from Alaskan waters. The prices remain the same. The Manhattan was out nineteen days to get her load, when the usual time is two weeks. That it is more difficult to get halibut is shown by the fact that a British Columbia firm has taken off one of its large boats not being able to get enough to keep her busy.

Merchants Accept Inferior Herring

So Says Writer on Reasons Why The Nova Scotia Herring Fisheries Do Not Progress More Rapidly—If Distinction Were Made, He Claims, There Would be Greater Encouragement For Fishermen to Do Better Curing—Better Prices Could Then Be Secured.

By A. H. Thompson.

The unsatisfactory condition of the herring fishing industry in the Maritime Provinces suggests imperative action to remedy the unbusiness-like methods of handling it that have prevailed for so many years. Persistent efforts have been made of late to remove the causes resulting in the regrettable difference that exists in the prices obtained for Canadian caught herring in comparison with British, Norwegian or Dutch fish.

While cod, haddock, halibut, mackerel and other familiar species are justly esteemed as food fishes, it is well to remember that for world-wide demand and family use the herring stands unrivalled; in fact, it has been called the "King of Fishes," disputing the title with the lordly salmon. In addition to its appetizing qualities, the herring is specially adapted for preservation in convenient form for long periods. No fish that swims compares with it as regards quantity, the very derivation of the name signifying "multitude," demonstrating its value as an inexhaustible source of food for the poor as well as the rich, on account of the vast number annually marketed.

Nova Scotia Figures.

In European statistics, barrels of herring run into the millions, developing an export trade that affords a striking object lesson to fishing interests on this side of the Atlantic. The record for Nova Scotia in the last year's Blue Book, gives these figures:—

	Value
118,839 bbls. pickled herring	$534,774
6,663,602 lbs. fresh herring	66,636
1,197,872 lbs. smoked and kippered	23,957
Total	$625,367

This may not be as large a percentage of the $8,000,000 total product last year as one might wish, but surely it is a forecast of the large field for expansion under improved twentieth century conditions. The latest available returns of the herring catch from Europe are as follows:—

Scotland	1,571,235 bbls.
Holland	353,652 bbls.
Germany	246,698 bbls.
Norway	185,452 bbls.
Iceland	32,857 bbls.
	2,389,904 bbls.

This total is against 2,055,107 bbls. for the corresponding period in 1909. These returns, however, not being for the full year of 1910 in Europe, are of material consequence in showing the possibilities of expansion in a region literally encompassed by fishing grounds unsurpassed for their resources in any quarter of the globe.

Blame on Fish Dealers.

The lamentable, and it may be said the astonishing contrast in the relative financial returns for our Nova Scotia herring, as contrasted with European herring may be partially attributed to laxity on the part of our merchants and dealers in tolerating systems of purchase offering scant encouragement to fishermen disposed to adopt improved methods of curing and packing.

Recommendations to those in authority will be of little avail as long as merchants accept inferior qualities on the same terms as those where proper care and attention have been given.

In a comprehensive report by Mr. Cowie on the Herring Fishery in the Blue Book for 1909, the whole question is threshed out in an impartial spirit, bringing out a brief history of the rise and progress of the Scottish Herring Fishery for several decades.

A digest of this report in a succeeding article may prove of interest to readers of The Grocer.

LOBSTER PACK IN THE EAST

James W. Ragsdale writes from Halifax that in the absence of statistics as to the actual pack of lobsters in the maritime provinces of Canada during the present season, the impression gathered from the trade is that the pack is at least normal, if not a little better. The prices are high and the trade has no trouble in selling. Shipments from Halifax to Europe during July and August were unusually large, averaging 20,000 to 30,000 cases per trip of the direct steamers. A shipment of 30,000 cases is worth about $500,000.

"A Trade Bringer"

Sold by all the Wholesale Trade

$100.00 worth of Sugar or —$10.00 worth of WONDER-SHINE

Mr. Grocer—which would you rather sell?

Figure your profit on the sugar, then compare it with the 50% profit on WONDER-SHINE.

And only one-tenth of the money invested.

It's the well-advertised specialties that make money for you---less capital is tied up, the cost of handling much less, and the profits ten times greater than the heavy staple lines.

Your customers can buy staples in any store, but they will go a long way to get a high-grade specialty.

WONDER-SHINE will bring and hold the high-class trade.

WONDER-SHINE is the new silver cleaner---cleans without rubbing.

We are spending $10,000 in advertising, telling the Canadian housewife of the "Wonder-Shine way."

Be ready for the first customer---do not send her to your competitor.

Let us send you a 25c. package free and our new "selling plan." Just a post-card with your name and address---write to-day sure.

TRADE MARK

SODA-CRYSTALS (WASHING SODA)

Foreign Soda Crystals—and some of English manufacture—are being extensively offered for sale in this country which are grossly adulterated with Glauber-Salts (Sulphate of Soda), a cheap product which is not only entirely useless for washing purposes, but is even likely to injure the fabrics with which it comes in contact. The Adulterated Soda-Crystals, although nominally lower in price than BRUNNER MOND'S PURE SODA CRYSTALS, are in reality much dearer owing to the large quantity of useless and injurious matter which they contain.

J. H. Wethey, Limited
ST. CATHARINES, - ONTARIO

"I have always found The Grocer a valuable aid to buying, both through its advertisements and its market quotations."

"I have been a reader for some 20 years and value the paper in many ways."

The above is an extract from a letter written by a Brandon, Man., merchant.

The secretary-treasurer of one of the best stores in Western Canada says:

"Both Mr. ——— and myself always take a keen interest in reading The Canadian Grocer, and we have more than once profited by both the suggestions offered, and the quotations, with probable market changes.

"Just recently, with our own judgment confirmed by your paper's report of a probable advance, we made a very profitable purchase on rolled oats, which saved us many dollars.

"There can be no question about the careful reading of a good trade paper such as yours being of great value to the retailer."

The value of any paper as an advertising medium depends upon the interest with which it is read. Because it saves the great majority of them considerable money, you can be sure that The Grocer is closely studied every week by the good merchants from one end of Canada to the other. And that's what makes the investment of manufacturers and wholesalers in our advertising space so profitable.

Macaroni Vermicelli Spaghetti

The peculiarly desirable qualities of Taganrog (Russia) wheat impart to the Macaroni, Vermicelli, Spaghetti and fancy pastes made by Codou of France, a delicacy of flavor unlike any others—the quality is superb.

Added to that is the dependency of expert workmanship furthered by the aid of a model factory. With the definite purpose of securing the "BEST," insist upon having "Codou's"

Look for the Name "CODOU" on the package—it assures and guarantees satisfaction. It is the stamp of reliability—the seal of goodness—the real and genuine. With it in your stock you are certain to avoid complaints. "Codou"— that is the name to think of.

The Mill They All Want

AND THE REASON WHY

No. 40—D.C.—$65.00
No 45—A.C.—$75.00

Because it represents the greatest real Value of Material, Quality and Workmanship at the Lowest Price.

Every Mill is ready for immediate use by simply attaching it to your lamp socket. Grinds two lbs. a minute and can be adjusted while the Mill is running. Grinders are of the best quality cast steel. It is furnished with detachable hand crank for use in emergencies, so that the grocer is never without his Mill if the current gives out.

JAMS

Purity and Flavor

are two features which have raised "Sterling" Jams to the zenith of public favor.

Nothing but the freshest fruit and purest cane sugar is used in the manufacture of these Jams, and they leave a very excellent profit margin for the wise retailer handling them. Are you wise to their virtues? See to your stocks.

WHAT ARE GOOD CURRANTS?

These are bald facts YOU can prove them

The different growths of Currants from different producing districts differ in color, in size, in flavor, in the amount of saccharine matter they contain. These differences are attributable to climatic conditions and the soil. But good and bad of their kind are produced in all the districts, be it the lowest grade from the Provinces, or the aristocrat variety from Vostizza.

Just as in Canada, there are in Greece, skilled and unskilled farmers. Some growers take pains in curing the Currant grape and produce sound, sweet fruit; others, who care only to turn their crop into cash, carelessly allow the grapes to ferment on the drying grounds, resulting in sour, ill-flavored Currants.

Now, we want to tell you that when you buy "Meyer's" Currants you get the very best, sound, well-cured fruit from the district marked on the case—the best that money can buy. The growers come to us with the best, because we pay the highest price. We select the good fruit, we turn away any that are not up to our high standard of quality.

We start with good fruit. Next we screen it twice—to remove the small, withered, berries—to remove the very large berries, which often contain stones. This good, sound fruit, twice screened, we carefully pack loose in the cases and thus "Meyer's" Currants reach you uncrushed, and unbroken. We spoil not the fruit to save the price of a few cases.

MEYER'S CLEANED CURRANTS

are dry cleaned—our electric brush machines remove all stems, stones, and dirt without the use of water—nor does the fruit at any time come in contact with the human hand.

You would not hesitate to eat "Meyer's" Currants just as they are, then you can safely recommend them to your most fastidious customer. Yes.

MEYER'S CURRANTS ARE GOOD CURRANTS

they may cost you a small fraction more than some others, but, your customers will appreciate the difference in quality, and appreciation is the parent of profit. Once you have bought "MEYER'S" you will realize how much this means.

Very many jobbers import Meyer's Currants—nearly all of them—if you find one who wants to substitute, analyze his reasons.

Commercial Account Register

Bookkeeping Without Books

Used It Three Years

Sheets lift out and fit any safe.

"In August, 1907, I put in one of your No. 200 Account Registers, and have had it in constant use ever since—over three years.

The Register is in first-class condition now, but trade has increased and I need a larger one. Would you kindly let me know if you could make any kind of exchange with me?

After examining several systems, I satisfied myself that yours is the best, and I would not care to do business without it."

Yours truly,

G. E. COON, Groceries, Flour and Feed.

Business Insurance

A grocer is known by the goods he sells. If he makes sure that each line stocked is the best in its class he is buying business insurance as well as merchandise. These goods are not excelled for quality, attractive packing, and price. For sale by most wholesalers.

GOODWILLIE'S FRUITS IN GLASS

Put up in a modern factory, situate in the heart of the fruit growing district, they easily lead all other brands. No detail tending to make the line most perfect has been overlooked. A trade builder and a trade holder.

JOSÉ SEGALERVA
Malaga, Spain

TABLE RAISINS

Unless Table Raisins are consistently uniform in quality, and packed attractively, they cannot, with policy, be stocked by a grocer of the right type. His Malaga Table Raisins, or "Blue Fruit," must be always select quality and packed neatly. Specify Segalerva's when you order, and secure such fruit.

MEATS IN GLASS

Have you remarked the growing demand for these goods? Rolled Ox Tongues, Galantines, Chicken, and a variety of other meats, may be secured in various packages. They're specialties which yield a profit above the average, and require little attention!

A Great Selling Team

¶ Buyers must be moved through several steps to be brought to the buying point.

¶ They must have their attention attracted to the article. They must have their interest in it awakened. They must be informed as to its nature, utility and merits. They must be convinced of its value. They must be moved to action—to closing.

¶ Good salesmen and good trade-paper advertising make a great team to carry the buyer through these several stages to the buying point. Alone, the salesman is at a disadvantage.

Standards for Meat and Meat Products

These are Now Established in Canada, and Come Into Effect on November 22—Different Kinds of Meat Explained in Detail—No Water Can be Added to Oysters—What Mince Meat, Lard, etc., Must Consist of—Important Move in Pure Food Direction.

The Food Standards for Meat and Meat Products will come into force on November 22. While they are now in the hands of the King's Printer at Ottawa, The Canadian Grocer has secured a draft copy and is, therefore, able to supply its readers with the established standards in advance.

The memorandum issued by W. J. Gerald, Deputy Minister, Department of Inland Revenue, giving these Standards is as follows:

"Under the authority of an Order of His Excellency in Council bearing date the 14th instant, and in virtue of the provisions of the twenty-sixth section of the "Adulteration Act," the following standards of quality have been established for "Meats and the principal Meat Products:"

A.—Meats

1. Meat, flesh is any clean, sound, dressed, and properly prepared edible part of animals in good health at the time of slaughter, and if it bears a name descriptive of its kind, composition, or origin, it corresponds thereto. The term "animals," as herein used, includes not only mammals, but fish, fowls, crustaceans, mollusks, and all other animals used as food.

2. Fresh meat is meat from animals recently slaughtered and properly cooled until delivered to the consumer.

3. Cold-storage meat is meat from animals recently slaughtered and preserved by refrigeration until delivered to the consumer.

4. Salted, pickled, and smoked meats are unmixed meats preserved by salt, sugar, vinegar, spices, or other harmless substances, or smoke, singly or in combination, whether in bulk or in suitable containers.

Note.—Suitable containers for keeping moist food products such as syrups, honey, condensed milk, soups, meat extracts, meats, manufactured meats and undried fruits and vegetables, and wrappers in contact with food products, contain on their surfaces, in contact with the food product, no lead, antimony, arsenic, zinc, or copper or any compounds thereof or any other poisonous or injurious substances. If the containers are made of tin plate, they are outside soldered, or if soldered inside, the solder used shall consist of pure tin only; and the plate in no place contains less than 113 milligrams of tin on a piece 5 centimeters square or one and eight-tenths grains on a piece two inches square.

This is equivalent to two pounds of tin per base box; but it must be noted that the regulation requires not only a minimum weight of tin per base box, but that this tin shall be evenly distributed over the surfaces of the plate.

The inner coating of the containers is free from pin holes, blisters and cracks.

If the tin plate is lacquered, the lacquer completely covers the tinned surface within the container and yields to the contents of the container no lead, antimony, arsenic, zinc, or copper or any compounds thereof, or any other poisonous or injurious substance.

5. Oysters—Water must not be added directly either as such, or in the form of ice, to shucked oysters.

B.—Manufactured Meats.

1. Manufactured meats are meats not included in paragraphs 2, 3 and 4, of section A, whether simple or mixed, whole or comminuted, in bulk or in suitable containers, with or without the addition of salt, sugar, vinegar, spices, or other harmless substances, smoke, oils, or rendered fat. If they bear names descriptive of kind, composition, or origin, they correspond thereto, and when bearing such descriptive names, if force or flavoring meats are used the kind and quantity thereof are made known.

2. Sausage, sausage meat, is a comminuted meat from swine or neat cattle or a mixture of such meats, either fresh, salted, pickled or smoked, with added salt and spices and with or without the addition of edible animal fats, cereals, blood and sugar, or subsequent smoking. It contains no larger amount of water than the meats from which it is prepared contain when in their fresh condition, and not more than ten per cent. of its weight of cereals; and if it bears a name descriptive of kind, composition, or origin, it corresponds to such descriptive name. All animal tissues used as containers, such as casings, stomachs, etc., are clean and sound and impart to the contents no other substance than salt.

3. Blood sausage is sausage to which has been added clean fresh blood from neat cattle or swine in good health at the time of slaughter.

4. Canned meat is the cooked meat of fowls, neat cattle or swine, preserved in hermetically sealed packages, and fulfils the conditions defined by the Meat and Canned Foods Act of 1907.

5. Corned or cured meat is meat cured or pickled with dry salt or in brine, with or without the addition of sugar or other harmless substances.

6. Potted meat is comminuted and cooked meat from those parts of the animal ordinarily used for food in the fresh state, with or without salt and spices, and enclosed in suitable containers hermetically sealed.

Cereals, when present, must not exceed ten per cent. by weight, unless declared.

7. Meat loaf is a mixture of comminuted cooked meat, with or without spices, cereals, milk and eggs, and pressed into a loaf. If it bears a descriptive name, it corresponds thereto.

8. Mince, mince meat is a mixture of chopped suet, apple and other fruit, salt, and spices, with sugar, syrup, or molasses, and with or without vinegar, fresh, concentrated, or fermented fruit juices, or spirituous liquors, or cooked, comminuted meat.

C.—Meat Extracts, Meat Peptones, Gelatin, etc.

1. Meat extract is the product obtained by extracting fresh meat with water and concentrating the liquid portion by evaporation after the removal of fat, and contains not less than seventy-five per cent. of total solids, of which not over twenty-seven per cent. is ash, and not over twelve per cent. is sodium chloride (calculated from the total chlorine present), not over six-tenths per cent. is fat and not less than eight per cent. is nitrogen. The nitrogenous compounds contain not less than forty per cent. of meat bases and not less than ten per cent. of kreatin and kreatinin.

2. Fluid meat extract is identical with meat extract except that it is concentrated to a lower degree and contains not more than seventy-five and not less than fifty per cent. of total solids.

3. Bone extract or stock is the product obtained by extracting clean, fresh, trimmed bones, of animals in good health at the time of slaughter, with boiling water and concentrating the liquid portion by evaporation, after removal of the fat, and contains not less than seventy-five per cent. of total solids.

4. Fluid bone extract is identical with bone extract except that it is concentrated to a lower degree and contains not more than seventy-five and not less than fifty per cent of total solids.

5. Meat juice is the fluid portion of muscle fibre, obtained by pressure or otherwise, and may be concentrated by evaporation at a temperature below the coagulating point of the soluble proteids. The solids contain not more than fifteen per cent. of ash, not more than two and five-tenths per cent. of sodium chloride (calculated from the total chlorine present), not more than four nor less than two per cent. of phosphoric acid and not less than twelve per cent. of nitrogen. The nitrogenous bodies contain not less than thirty-five per cent. of coagulable proteids and not more than forty per cent. of meat bases.

6. Peptones are products prepared by the digestion of proteid material by means of enzymes or otherwise, and contain not less than ninety per cent. of proteoses and peptones.

7. Gelatin (edible gelatin) is the purified, dried, inodorous product of the hydrolysis, by treatment with boiling water, of certain tissues, as skin, ligaments, and bones, from sound animals, and contains not more than two per cent. of ash and not less than fifteen per cent. of nitrogen.

D.—Lard.

1. Lard is the rendered fresh fat from hogs in good health at the time of slaughter, is clean, free from rancidity, and contains, necessarily incorporated in the process of rendering, not more than one per cent. of substances other than fatty acids and fat.

2. Leaf lard is lard rendered at moderately high temperatures from the internal fat of the abdomen of the hog, excluding that adherent to the intestines, and has an iodine number not greater than sixty-five and contains not more than one per cent. of substances other than fatty acids and fat.

3. Compound lard, lard compound, etc., is a mixture of animal and vegetable fats and oils. It must be free from rancidity, be made from sound and pure materials, and contain not more than one per cent. of substances other than fatty acids and fat.

The standards above defined take effect on the 22nd day of November.

Milk and Its Products Defined by Law

Food Standards Now Legalized by Dominion Government—What Condensed and Evaporated Milk Will Consist of—Evaporated Cream Must Contain 25 per Cent. of Milk Fat—Prosecutions Can Now be Followed Up by a Definite Course.

On the opposite page is given the Food Standards for Meat and Meat Products, just legalized by the Dominion Government.

Below will be found the standards for milk and milk products, which have also been legalized, but which have not appeared up to the present time in the regular government circular. So far as the grocery trade is concerned the Standards respecting condensed and evaporated milk, evaporated cream, milk powder, and butter and cheese are the most important.

Milk and Its Products.

1. Milk, unless otherwise specified, is the fresh, clean and unaltered product, obtained by the complete, uninterrupted milking, under proper sanitary conditions, of one or more healthy cows, properly fed and kept, excluding that obtained within two weeks before and one week after calving, and contains not less than three and one quarter per cent. of milk fat, and not less than eight and one half per cent of milk solids, other than fat.

2. Skim milk is milk from which a part or all of the cream has been removed, and contains not less than eight and one-half per cent. of non-fat, milk solids.

3. Pasterized milk is milk that has been heated below boiling, but sufficiently to kill most of the active organisms present, and immediately cooled to 45 deg. F., or lower, and kept at a temperature not higher than 45 deg. F., until delivered to the consumer, at which time it shall not contain more than 10,000 bacteria per cubic centimetre.

4. Sterlized milk is milk that has been heated at the temperature of boiling water, or higher, for a length of time sufficient to kill all organisms present; and must be delivered to the consumer in a sterile condition. Sterilized milk shall not be sold or offered for sale, except in hermetically closed containers, bearing the words "This milk should be used within twelve hours after opening the container."

5. Certified Milk. Milk sold as certified milk, shall comply with the following requirements:

(a) It shall be taken from cows semi-annually subjected to the tuberculin test, and found without reaction.

(b) It shall contain not more than 10,000 bacteria per cubic centimetre from June to September; and not more than 5,000 bacteria per cubic centimetre from October to May, inclusive.

(c) It shall be free from blood, pus, or disease producing organisms.

(d) It shall be free from disagreeable odor or taste.

(e) It shall have undergone no pasteurization or sterilization, and be free from chemical preservatives.

(f) It shall have been cooled to 45 deg. F. within half an hour after milking, and kept at that temperature until delivered to the consumer.

(g) It shall contain 13 to 13 per cent. of milk solids, of which, at least 3.5 per cent. is fat.

(h) It shall be from a farm whose herd is inspected monthly by the veterinarian, and whose employes are examined monthly by a physician.

6. Evaporated milk is milk from which a considerable portion of water has been evaporated, and contains not less than 26 per cent of milk solids, and not less than 7.20 per cent. of milk fat.

7. Condensed milk is milk from which a considerable portion of water has been evaporated, and to which sugar has been aided. It contains not less than 28 per cent. of milk solids, and not less than 7.7 per cent. of milk fat.

8. Condensed skim milk is skim milk from which a considerable portion of water has been evaporated, with or without the addition of sugar.

9. Buttermilk is the product that remains when butter is separated from ripened cream, by the usual churning processes; or a similar product, made by the appropriate treatment of skimmed milk.

10. Goat's milk, ewe's milk, etc., are the fresh, clean, lacteal secretions, free from colestrum, obtained by the complete milking of healthy animals other than cows, properly feed and kept, and conform in name to the species of animals from which they are obtained.

Cream.

1. Cream is that portion of milk, rich in milk fat, which rises to the durface of milk on standing, or is separated from it by centrifugal force, is fresh and clean, and contains (unless otherwise specified) not less than eighteen per cent. of milk fat.

2. When guaranteed to contain another percentage of milk fat than eithteen per cent., it must conform to such guarantee.

3. Cream must be entirely free from gelatine, sulcrate of lime, gums or other substances aided with a view to give density, consistency or apparent thickness to the article.

4. Cream must contain no preservatives of any kind, nor any coloring matter, other than is natural to milk.

5. Evaporated cream, clotted cream, condensed cream or any other preparation purporting to be a special cream, except ice-cream, must conform to the definition of cream, and must contain at least twenty-five per cent. of milk fat.

Milk Fat or Butter Fat.

1. Milk fat, butter fat, is the fat of milk and has a Reichert-Moissl number not less than twenty-four and a specific gravity not less than 0.905.

Butter.

1. Butter is the clean non-rancid product made by gathering in any manner the fat of fresh or ripened milk or cream into a mass, which also contains a small portion of the other milk constituents, with or without salt, and contains not less than eighty-two and five-tenths per cent. milk fat, and not more than sixteen per cent. of water. Butter may also contain added coloring matter of harmless character.

Cheese.

1. Cheese is the sound, solid and ripened product made from milk or cream by coagulating the caseine thereof with rennet or lactic acid, with or without the addition of ripening ferments and seasoning, and contains, in the water-free substance, not less than forty-five per cent. of milk fat. Cheese may also contain added coloring matter of harmless character.

2. Skim milk cheese is the sound, solid and ripened product made from skim milk by coagulating the caseine thereof with rennet or lactic acid, with or without the addition of ripening ferments and seasoning.

3. Goat's milk cheese, ewe's milk cheese, etc., are the sound, ripened products made from the milks of the animals specified, by coagulating the caseine thereof with rennet or lactic acid with or without the addition of ripening ferments and seasoning.

Ice Cream.

Those retailers who handle ice cream, etc., will be interested in the following:

1. Ice cream is a frozen product, made from cream and sugar, with or without harmless flavoring and coloring materials and with or without gelatin, gum tragacanth, or other harmless stiffening materials, in amount less than two per cent.; and contains not less than fourteen per cent. of milk fat.

2. Fruit ice cream is a frozen product, made as described under ice cream, but containing sound, clean and mature fruit. It must contain not less than twelve per cent. of milk fat.

3. Nut ice cream is a frozen product, made as described under ice cream, but containing sound, non-rancid nuts. It must contain not less than twelve per cent. of milk fat.

Miscellaneous Milk Products.

1. Whey is the product remaining after the removal of fat and caseine from milk in the process of cheese-making.

2. Kumiss is the product made by the ducts. Hitherto, owing to the lack of adequately defined Canadian food standards, there has been doubt as to just what constituted adulteration, and there have been few prosecutions under the act.

alcoholic fermentation of mare's milk or cow's milk.

3. Milk powder is the soluble powder product made from milk and contains unless otherwise specified, not less than n nety-five per cent. of milk solids, and not less than twenty-six per cent. of milk fat.

4. Skim milk powder, separated milk powder is the soluble powder product made from skim milk, and contains not less than ninety-five per cent. of milk solids.

These new standards, together with those recently promulgated for meat and grain products, will become operative after the necessary advertisement for thirty days in The Canada Gazette, and will enable the department hereafter to proceed on a well-defined legal basis with the prosecution of any firms found guilty of adulterating food products.

New Customers Gained by Advertising

Series of Short Ads. Showing How the Attention of the Housewife Can be Gradually Secured and Held—Talks Should be of a 'Leading Out' Character so as to Produce Some Thinking—Information in the Ads. Desirable.

By Henry Johnson, Jr.

That this matter of advertising is really serious business may be very clearly indicated by the following anent the magnitude of the task of establishing a trade-mark:

> It requires a vast amount of education to establish the value of a trade-mark. Education is needed to fasten securely in the public mind the peculiar merit of a certain commodity, and education, mind you, does not mean forcing in, but drawing out. You cannot truly educate the mind in the way an advertiser seeks to do it by hammering in a few facts, undigested, or predigested, and letting it go at that. Rather must you lay the facts before the public in a manner that stimulates thought and mental debate, so that people may arrive, by the usual educational processes, at conclusions of their own, which, being reached by their own reasoning powers, they will regard as irresistible and settled for good and all.—Advertising and Selling.

I do not know when I have read anything more concentrated in its acute delineation of solid facts. It can be read over many times, and then gone back to for re-readings, with cumulative profit to the reader.

The Public Thinks for Itself.

For look where it leads us:

We, in our supposedly superior wisdom but really in our shallow ignorance, often hold that "the public" does not know or, better still, "does not appreciate" certain service, or qualities, or values; while, as a matter of fact, not only is the public doing its own thinking all the time but, as indicated in my last, it is sitting in judgment on us every day—and deciding rightly. If this were not so, the public could be deceived, but do not undertake such deception, for you will end in disaster. If you have any idea that you can "cut the cost" on your fifty cent tea through the sacrifice of any shade of value, you will learn of your mistake to your lasting loss. For, while nothing is more uncertain than the taste or judgment of an individual, nothing is more stable, certain and omniscient than the judgment of the aforesaid public. Otherwise, goodness, merit and quality would languish while error, adulteration and deceit would flourish.

You have a trade-mark to establish on a value-producing basis. That trade-mark is Smith's store. If you think of the impression you make on the public, through conscious or unconscious advertising, in this way, you will not be apt to underestimate the magnitude of the work on which you are engaged. On the contrary, you will be likely to give the subject of advertising much more serious and sustained thought than you may have given it hitherto.

Appeal of a Neat Store.

"A drawing out." That is the idea. I indicated last week how certain impressions about your store might readily "draw out" comment and establish conclusions in the public mind which would be very disadvantageous to you. It seems to me that what I wrote then would carry conviction as being elementary at best. Thus the suggestions I made for the internal improvement of the store should be accepted without argument; for I think you will say at once: "Of course, a neat store will appeal to people more forcibly than a disorderly store."

Very well; seeing we have felt that tidiness was desirable and have cleaned up so that we might "draw out" the right impression, why not go a step farther? Dozens, or hundreds, pass our windows every day, and we are now prepared to make the right impression on them; so we are so far going right. Then let us prepare to TELL OTHERS who as yet do not come our way about some of the good points of our store, which really ARE good points to-day and can therefore safely be dwelt upon—because we can now MAKE GOOD.

The Newspaper Medium.

But remember that it is a "Drawing Out," and let us therefore work slowly and with painstaking care. The best medium in any fairly live town is the evening newspaper. This because it is the medium which reaches the family when the day's work is done, when "the folks" are altogether for the short hour or two which is their own to pass in mutual talk and the enjoyment of the quiet exchange of ideas.

The "Old Man" gets in first on the paper and reads about politics and business news. "Mother" reads the little, intimate gossip about the neighbors to learn who is sick, or getting well, or to be married or buried; and both mother and daughter read about "society." Here is the accepted medium and now the golden opportunity to get in a few remarks which will "draw out" the right thoughts and impressions about Smith's store.

But the highest advertising art is called for, for you must make your little talks harmonize with the family mood if you are to convey the right impression. You must not strain or twist; you must not be flippant or "funny": you must not talk long, tedious sermons. You must fall in with the "atmosphere" and talk in the same "good-easy-reading-for-the-people" tone, or you will not get the right audience. Get space in the "local news" or "society" section, a few lines every other evening, and tell a little every time, in gentle, conversation manner.

Gets the Mother's Attention.

For instance:

> They have a nice way about them at Smith's store—goods so neatly arranged and classified. It is a pleasure to buy there. Deliveries accurate and really quite prompt.

The two or three lines are so unobtrusive and short that they are read without conscious thought or effort. Probably all but "Mother" will have passed them over. But "Mother" passes very little that even remotely affects her household, so when she reads she will likely say: "Did you see this about Smith's? If things are neat there I certainly never noticed it." Father is dozing, but rouses sufficiently to mutter: "Dirtish plaesh in town!" and drops off again. . nd so it passes—you cannot expect too much the first time; the point is that you have got the family's attention. The best of it is, that you have gone on record as promising good deliveries and having obligated yourself that way, you will see that goods go out promptly tomorrow. Then you will get the habit, and another great forward step will be made.

Next ad.:

> Those cranberries at Smith's store are beauties—a whole window full of them, too—make your mouth water to look at them. Sixteen cents a quart—and worth the price.

"Mother" sees that ad with both eyes and full appreciation of its meaning. She "wonders what they are up to at Smith's; seems almost like a new man had taken hold," for you see, she has in mind your store as she saw it last week,—before you put your house in order. But you can bank on it that she will see those cranberries to-morrow, even if she does not want any of them; and, having visited you, she will not fail to note the change for the better, for you cannot fool "Mother"—bless her heart!—very much. Then, if you have been busy perfecting your organization with the spirit of the plan you have inaugurated so that you give her good service, your store will take on new meaning as far as "Mother" is concerned; and you could make no better investment in a thousand years.

Advises Giving Information.

Next ad.:

Aside from freshness, the true value in prunes consists in getting the right sizes—minimum proportion of stone. Best sizes are 30s and 40s—thirty and forty to the pound—most economical. 15 and 12½ cents at Smith's store—finest California fruit.

Give a little real information in each ad. The public sits in judgment, but you are the technical man and, if you give the right information the verdict will be that you are right, sincere and can be trusted—which is 90 per cent. of the battle.

Next ad.:

Things are carefully done at Smith's store. Telephone orders carefully taken; articles carefully wrapped; goods carefully delivered — and on time, too, if the time allowed be not too short. Smith does his full share for your satisfaction.

By this time you have impressed not only "Mother" but the "Old Man" in such a way that they look for your talks and sometimes remark on what you have to say. And there are others besides this particular "Mother"—others who are looking for unusual neatness, accuracy and obliging service. They will all pay the prices needful to secure such service; and if your experience has been different, look within and maybe you will discover the cause.

COCOA BEAN CROP.

Production Has Increased Rapidly and Surplus is Now Registered.

Within fifteen years the world's crop of raw cocoa beans has increased from 75,000 to 205,000 tons. Should the Gold Coast crop continue to increase at its present ratio, and all other crops remain stationary by 1913 the world's crop will have reached 360,000 tons, and hence by that time the Gold Coast singly, with a crop of 180,000 tons will be producing as much raw cocoa as the world now consumes. While the cocoa crop from 1903 to 1909 increased 65 per cent., the nine leading consuming nations advanced their requirements by only about 60 per cent. The United States imported 53,378 tons of beans in 1909, with Germany 40,723, and the United Kingdom, 24,264, following. The indications are according to cocoa men, that prices will ease off for the next few years unless production is limited.

The Dried Fruit and Nut Situation

Prices of 1910 When Compared With Those of 1909 Show Some Big Advances—Short Crops and Heavy Demands are Stated to be the Reasons—Prune Market Exceptionally Strong.

Grocers have doubtless noticed of late, persistent reports of short crops and consequent advancing prices in some lines that are in particular demand during the Christmas season. In cases of this kind it is almost impossible to predict what turn the markets will take because of the numerous influences at work.

Local conditions are generally dependent upon the tendencies in the world's markets. Throughout the winter there is a good demand for prunes, but the supplies this year are much below the normal crop. At present the market is quiet, but the situation appears to be firm. Wholesalers claim that higher prices may be expected, and it is a fact that since the new fruit has been received prices have been advancing. The following figures allow the reader to compare present prices of prunes on a Toronto basis with those ruling in November a year ago:

	1909.	1910.
30—40, in 25 lb. bxs.	.10½	12½—13
40—50 " " "	.09	11½—12
50—60 " " "	.08	11½
60—70 " " "	.07½	11
70—80 " " "	.07	10½
80—90 " " "	.06½	8½— 9½
90—100 " " "	.06	.09

According to market news, the supplies of prunes are light. There is no reason to doubt the veracity of the reports and the position wholesalers are assuming is significant. Indications all point to strong market conditions with the likelihood of higher prices.

How Nuts Have Gone Up.

In several lines of nuts the market is also advancing, reference being especially to walnuts and almonds. Again, light crops are mostly responsible and retailers know that prices are higher. The question is will there be any further upward movement. Some wholesalers and importers who study conditions closely say there will and even state that there will not be enough shelled walnuts to meet the demand. Even now the price is pretty high, but wholesalers claim that it will likely go higher. New crops have just arrived, but they are not expected to weaken prices. When in a few weeks the market settles down under the new supplies the retailer should plan his own campaign. If he considers that he will need further supplies before or after Christmas he should decide whether to buy early or to delay. After the new year the demand will not be as heavy in nuts and the market might weaken under that influence, but on the other hand stocks are light and judging from the intelligence from various sources, a decline even then is not likely.

Present prices compare with those in November of a year ago as follows:

	1909.	1910.
Almonds—
Formigetta	11½	14-15
Tarragona	12	16
Shelled	28-32	35-38
Walnuts—
Grenoble	13¼	15½-16
Bordeaux	11	14
Shelled	23-26	39-40
Filberts	12-12½	12½-13
Pecans	16-18	18-20
Brazils	15	14½-15
Peanuts	8-9	9½-12½

Almonds and walnuts are particularly short and the rest of the market is influenced to a certain extent by that condition.

The Raisin Situation.

The raisin market between now and the first of the new year is not expected to find prices declining. After that it is impossible to tell. Prices compare as follows:

	1909.	1910.
Sultanas	5-5½	9½-15
Valencias	6-6¼	08-09

It must be expected that short crops in one line will affect other dried fruits.

Dried apples are dearer and it is generally admitted that evaporators will turn out a quantity much below the average. Dates show but little change in price and in quantity. Apricots are quoted slightly higher than a year ago as:

	1909.	1910.
Standards	15	15-16
Fancy	17	19-20

The whole question is worthy of consideration by the retailer who desires to "get in right." Some consider it a gamble, others declare that they base their buying on experience and knowledge of existing conditions.

From the present outlook, prunes and nuts appear to be good property and several other lines seem to be almost equally as valuable.

TRADE NOTES.

E. H. Ruttan has disposed of his grocery store at Wallaceburg, Ont., to Isaac Lynch, of Detroit. Owing to ill health, Mr. Ruttan has to leave for a drier climate.

A. W. Jackson has opened a general store in Whitby, Ont. He has purchased a $4,000 bankrupt stock in an eastern Ontario village, which he is selling.

Frank Hutton's grocery store, Ouellette Avenue, Windsor, Ont., was entered by some unknown person the other night through a cellar window, and the till, which fortunately contained only small change to the amount of less than $1, was rifled.

New York city has some 600 chain stores. There is now a rumor that these are to be combined and that the Standard Oil Co. is one of those behind the scheme.

Before going to press it was learned that the Library scheme mentioned on another page of this issue had reached Oshawa, Ont. It will be remembered that some weeks ago The Grocer described its inception in Ingersoll, Ont. Other towns under consideration at the present time are Newmarket and Burlington.

Plans to Overcome the Egg Shortage

White Plymouth Rock Fowls Imported to Help Meet the Shortage Which Was so Prevalent Last Season—Birds Are Selected Especially for Their Laying Qualities—Working of the Demonstration Station.

Montreal, Nov. 17.—One car, containing one thousand imported, pure bred, White Plymouth Rock fowls and chickens landed at Beaverton Station, Ont., recently.

This shipment comprised a selection of the finest birds procurable, especially selected for their laying qualities, and is of peculiar significance inasmuch as it is the commencement of an educational campaign introduced by large pork-packing and provision houses.

Statistics show that for several years past, although the Federal and Provincial Governments have tried to educate farmers to produce more poultry, still instead of an increase an actual decrease in production is taking place. Only last spring, dealers were forced to import eggs from Russia and China to supply the Canadian needs, and in an effort to overcome conditions of this kind, and to regain for Canada the place that she once held as an exporting country of poultry and eggs. these firms have joined hands in a campaign which some maintain will solve the problem.

Realizing that educational work was necessary, a demonstration station was opened in May, 1910, in Peterboro', Ont., and the services of an expert poultryman engaged, whose duty it was to hold meetings in the neighborhood, at which the benefits of proper methods and their adoption were explained.

Better Price Received.

The result of such efforts was that while the price of ordinary eggs delivered to merchants ran in the neighborhood of 16c to 17c per doz., 20c to 21c was paid for eggs which were marketed according to the new methods. The movement spread, and R. E. Gunn, of Dunrobin Stock Farm, Beaverton, Ont., became interested in the work of his section, but owing to the farmers in the Thorah township not raising any quantity of poultry of the proper breed and type, the progress was not so marked as in the Peterboro' section.

To overcome this difficulty, R. E. Gunn authorized the buying agent of Gunns, Limited, Toronto, and Gunn, Langlois & Co., Montreal, to procure for him a sufficiently large quantity of high-class poultry to warrant him in engaging the services of a poultry expert. MacDonald College, of Ste. Anne's, Que., furnished the man in the person of Thos. A. Benson, who for the past month has been placing the poultry division of Dunrobin Farm in readiness to receive the poultry, the arrival of which marks the commencement of a new era in Thorah Township, and sets an example to every township in Ontario and Quebec.

Already arrangements to supply other sections have been made, thereby creating a growing interest in the work.

Made an Incubator.

To do this, it was necessary not only to be in a position to supply high-class breeding stock, but to enter into all branches of the industry, and already the Gunn Incubator, manufactured, not as a commercial enterprise, but to supply a long-felt want in artificial incubation, is being used.

It will be certainly interesting to watch the development of the industry.

How Long Will Salmon be a Staple Food?

Writer on the Pacific Coast Gives His Reasons Why Prices of Canned Salmon Have Gone Up In Recent Years—Increase in Cost of Production He Says—Salmon Below Price of Meats and Other Foods When Food Value is Considered.

By Daniel L. Pratt in Pacific Fisherman.

The gradual increase recently in the price of canned salmon causes someone to ask the question, "How long will canned salmon remain a staple?"

This is a problem which has been bothering the heads of more than one of the packers and brokers of the Coast. It is a question which entered into the naming of the opening prices for the past several years. We think that we can truthfully answer this question by stating that canned salmon will remain a staple just as long as the packers of the Pacific Coast can keep it so.

The increase in price during the past few years has meant little if any more profit to the salmon packer. We doubt that if in the case of most grades it has meant any more profit. It is an increase that has been brought about by the necessities of the business, principally the increased cost of labor, supplies and raw material. One Alaska packer stated to us recently that the price of $1.35 named on Alaska Reds this year did not mean as much net profit to him in view of the increased cost of production as a price of $1.10 did five years ago. The only reason, he said, that the price hadn't been increased sooner, to meet these conditions, was that the markets didn't at that time warrant it and that the packers consequently had to be content with what they could get and take a very small profit as a result. As soon as the expansion of the markets placed the packers in a more independent position —that is, as soon as the demand equaled and exceeded the supply, it was only natural that these packers, who had been fighting the game for a dozen years to bring the bnsiness to a point where they could make money, should increase the price to a point where this legitimate profit would come to them.

A Business Proposition.

So far as the mere question of supply and demand is concerned, the situation this year and last year warrant a much higher price than was established. But the salmon packers realized that too large an advance would put the retail price of salmon to a point where it would no longer be a staple but would become a fancy food article. So they kept the price within reasonable bounds. This was not done by any means from a purely philanthropic standpoint. It was just a plain business proposition. The secret of the success of the present salmon market lies in the fact that at its price canned salmon is the cheapest and most wholesome food product procurable in the markets. As long as it continues to be, these markets will remain invincible. But when the price is forced up to where the people can no longer buy it as a staple food, then its consumption is bound to be more or less seriously affected.

This will never occur as a voluntary move on the part of the packers. If it should ever come about, it will be because the cost of production forces the price up in order to give the producers a living profit. Sockeyes and Columbia River Chinooks, on account of their scarcity, have already become, in a way, a fancy food, but there is a fixed, legitimate demand for limited supplies of it as such. Even at that, both of these grades remain still in the staple class as compared with meats and other foods. But we hope it will be many years before Red and Pink salmon are forced by reason of the cost of production into the fancy canned goods class, and we believe it is the desire of the packers to keep them staples as long as the economic conditions of the industry will permit.

J. W. Glover, Chatham, Ont., is leaving for Airdrie, Alta., where he will start a general store.

Frank A. Gaitair who has until recently been connected with A. N. Delresay's grocery, Bathurst, N.B., has gone into business for himself in that town.

AGAINST CO-OPERATIVE MEASURE

If the promoters behind the co-operative store scheme come before parliament again for special privileges as they have done at different times in the past, they will be confronted with a bigger and stronger opposition than ever before.

Last year when the Co-operative Societies' Bill was advanced Eastern Canada and particularly Quebec and Ontario had to bear the brunt of the fight. Now the West has become greatly interested in the agitation and when the time comes, if it does come, the voices of the Western Canadian merchants will be very emphatic.

Special favors to the few will have strong opposition

RICE CROP DAMAGED.

The British commercial attache at Yokohama, Japan, reports that the damage to the Japanese rice crop owing to floods is estimated at $19,237,000 and to other crops $7,241,000.

Officially the Japanese government shows a rice crop of 48,725,597 koku (1 koku equals 5,118 bushels). This is 7.1 per cent. less than an average year. The greatest damage occurred in the north and east of Japan from deficient heat and floods.

So far as Japan is concerned therefore the price of rice will be firmly held.

THE DEALER'S PROFITS.

It has been suggested more than once that the prices charged by dealers were so unyielding as to be the cause for the high cost of living. This idea, however, is being combated by jobbers, many of whom openly defend the prices of the retailer.

One well informed jobber recently said that a gross profit of 5 or 6 cents for the retailer on walnuts, for example, was not too large, considering the fact that the season was short. His belief was that a retailer doing a business, say of $40,000 a year in a large city, ought to get a net profit of 10 per cent. for himself. Taking into account such a retailer's rent, cost of help and horses and wagons, light and heat, this jobber believes that the retailer is justified in adding 25 per cent. to the price he pays for his goods. Figuring the expense of doing business at 15 per cent., this leaves the retailer 10 per cent. clear.

The general public are frequently too rash in laying the blame for some apparently high price. They would be satisfied, for instance, if the retail dealer were to sell them a bag of potatoes or apples as cheaply as they could be purchased in the field or orchard. They forget that the dealer has to pay freight charges, spend his time in buying, assume all risks in storage, pay himself something for his day's work, and bring the goods to a point easy of access to them, causing them no trouble or inconvenience whatever.

These things are often forgotten and the dealer is too frequently branded as an avaricious being stealing the public's money. While any fair minded person will not maintain that a dealer should make an unjust profit, cost, service, expense of doing business, difficulty in getting the goods, length of season and everything else considered, yet he must object to many of the unfair accusations that have been and are being made from time to time.

THE CRAFTY DEAD BEAT

The autumn is again with us and it brings its pleasures and troubles. The crop of dead-beats is represented to be about the average. Old grocers think twice before opening up new accounts, but the inexperienced get caught by the crafty tales of the wily newcomer and you can't warn the new man about dead beats. He only gives you a look of scorn and feels he knows how to handle them. A year later he comes to his senses after getting a lot of charitable feeling knocked out of his system. Then he goes to his competitors and wants everyone to sell for cash.

The slow pays and dead-beats never stop long in one place. They move from city to city, village to village and thus get fresh starts. Verily the world must owe them a living.

REASONS FOR SELF PRAISE.

British Columbia is congratulating itself on the success of its apple crop this season. It has particular reason for this since the remainder of Canada was rather unfortunate in this respect.

The quality of the fruit is splendid. An instance of this was seen at the apple show, when two carloads of apples competed for a big prize. There were 72,000 apples in each entry, and to make the award the judges had to search for some time to find some point of difference, so perfect and complete was the display. Finally, they found an apple that had a flaw in shape, and strictly speaking could not qualify as No. 1, although in size and color it was all right. This apple, which would have passed under ordinary conditions, decided the prize.

TO TEST FIXED PRICES.

There is to be another judicial test in California of the right of manufacturers of special products to establish a standard price and enforce its observance by contract upon wholesale and retail sellers. It is getting to be a matter of interest and importance in a considerable line of production. Some time ago The Grocer referred to a manufacturer of olive oil in California, who had a special brand of his own, and who brought suit for damages against a retail dealer for cutting the price, the observance of which had been a condition of its sale. He won his case.

The court held that fixing a price to be observed throughout the trade was not an effort at monopoly, as only a particular brand of the goods was affected, which the plaintiff alone produced, and the competition of others was not restrained. The producer was under no obligation to sell to any particular dealer or to anybody at all, and might do so on his own terms. Maintaining a standard price was only a reasonable means of "securing the legitimate benefits of the reputation which his product may have attained."

The new suit is being brought by a company manufacturing a cereal food which has a brand of its own, against a department store in San Francisco. This store offered through its advertisements the article at a price below that fixed by the manufacturer.

The principal contention of the price cutters in such cases is that when they have purchased the goods they have a right to dispose of them at whatever price they see fit to ask. They claim that the manufacturer who gets his own price cannot enforce upon those who buy his product a limit below which they cannot go. He may not be obliged, they say, to sell except upon his own terms, but having once sold he cannot enforce the terms by any contract.

The outcome of this case will be followed with interest by the Canadian trade. Whether the manufacturer will have the assistance of judicial authority in maintaining his price is the question that will be determined.

Railway Men Ask for Bi-monthly System of Wages

St. Thomas, Ont., Nov. 17.—One of the great problems which merchants of this city, particularly grocers, have to wrestle with, is the monthly payment system which governs railway employes. So large a proportion of St. Thomas' population is made up of people concerned in one way or another with railway work that the place is commonly known as the "Railway City." It is of little use for a merchant to press for payment at any other time than around the monthly pay day. The banks keep open during the evenings on these occasions, and the pay cheques are quickly turned into currency and applied on merchants' accounts, after which the railway man's wife is often in a state of chronic financial distress. As in the case of a business with small capital, the advantage of cash buying, or the purchase of goods in large quantities is likely to be lost.

With these disadvantages in mind, an important resolution was included in a number of demands framed on Monday night at a union meeting of railway men, held in Engineers' Hall here. Among reforms which the allied unions will seek to secure from the Dominion Government is a change to bi-monthly payment of wages. The resolution is worded, "so as to allow the employes to pay cash for their goods, and do away altogether with the credit system."

TRAVELERS' NOMINATIONS.

Close Run for the Presidency Expected in Montreal.

Montreal, Nov. 17.—Charles Gurd and J. Bevaus Giles were nominated for president of the Dominion Commercial Travelers' Association in Montreal last Saturday evening, and, as a result, it is likely that the election contest will be a close one.

Mr. Gurd is one of the association's oldest members, having served on the directorate and as treasurer, while Mr. Giles has been vice-president for two years.

A. J. Brown and E. Duckett were nominated for vice-president and Max Murdock was unanimously re-elected treasurer.

Fifteen nominations were made for the five vacancies on the directorate occuring through the retirement of J. N. Picard, H. M. Levine, L. Decelles, A. J. Brown and J. T. McBride. They are: Geo. W. Prescott, M. W. Hackett, L. L. Bernard, Robert Wall, H. M. Levine, John O'Donnell, Geo. L. Bert, W. C. Murray, John T. McBride, Eugene Poitvin, Charles L. Martin, Wm. J. Irving, C. C. Lapierre, C. M. Cameron and J. Fred Featherston.

S. J. Mathewson was made president of the annual dinner committee, composed of the following: W. J. Egan, H. M. Levine, J. T. McBride, R. C. Wilkins, D. M. Lefebvre, Luke Moore, Geo. A. Mann, Stuart Wotherspoon, Ed. Duckett, T. Gallaher, F. S. Cote, James Robinson, F. N. Picard, E. Poitvin, Max. Murdock, E. J. Terry, John Paterson, J. F. Dubreuil, Ed. Marchand, Mr. Michaud.

A letter was read notifying the association that J. D. Rolland had donated $2,000 to the Notre Dame Hospital, endowing in perpetuity, a bed for the use of members of the society who might have need of it.

J. K. Wallace, of the Toronto association was present at the meeting. Voting will start immediately, and will be done largely by mail, the closing date being December 16.

C. T. A. NOMINATIONS.

The result of the ballot will be made known at the annual meeting of the association to be held in St. George's Hall on Dec. 29.

Reprimanded for Buying "Big" Stock of Canned Goods

An interesting illustration of how the canned goods trade has developed was casually mentioned a few days ago by a Canadian wholesaler who in a reminiscent mood was dwelling upon the changes that have taken place in later years. In former days when he held a responsible position as chief buyer with another wholesale house, his employer learned at one time that a stock of fifty cases of canned goods were being carried. This he considered extravagant and considered it necessary to give him a little business advice which in some respects might have been considered a slight reprimand.

The buyer is now at the head of a large wholesale business and his order from one canning company alone for this year's pack of canned goods numbered between 32,000 and 33,000 cases. It seems wonderful that the demand for canned goods should have made such an enormous advance as is indicated by these figures.

WHOLESALER CUT OFF.

Flour Manufacturers Claim He Sold Their Product to Price Cutter.

Vancouver, B.C., Nov. 17.—Important developments have taken place in connection with the flour trade in Vancouver. An effort was made some time ago to get the different mills to protect their retail price. Most of the mills agreed, but one large firm held out. One of the grocers in the city offered flour as an attraction at $1.75 per sack, and displayed some of the product of another mill. This company protested against this, and when a wholesaler sold the offending retailer some more of this firm's flour to be offered at the lower price, the milling firm announced that hereafter it would sell no more to the wholesaler. Now, while several brands are jobbed at $6.90, the flour over which the trouble was all about is given to the retailer direct at $6.50. The results to the milling company are the same, as the $6.50 figure is what the wholesalers got it for before.

TRADE NOTES.

Flucke & Staunton have opened a general store at Carbon, Alta.

R. A. Newman, general merchant, Desford, Man., has sold to A. A. Howard of Edmonton.

Markets—Sugar Still Shows Weakness

Market is Stationary at Present, But the Slight Firmness is Believed to be But Temporary and Another Decline is Looked For—Spices are Very Firm and Show Considerable Advance in Prices of Six Months Ago—Coffee Statistics Point to Continued Strong Markets—Dried Fruits and Nuts are Practically All Holding Their Own.

QUEBEC MARKETS

POINTERS—

Sugar—A little firmer market.

Seed Tapioca—Scarcity.

Tea—Market becoming stronger.

Dates—Lower price expected.

Montreal, Nov. 17.—The market situation is much the same as that of last week. There have been few price changes in the general grocery markets, none of the prominent staples being affected.

The sugar market is claimed to be a shade firmer, but there is no immediate chance for any advance in prices. Cream of tartar, nuts, prunes, raisins, and currants are all strong. Dates are expected to ease off somewhat when new shipments arrive, and the bean market is also on the easy side.

Sugar—The sugar market is a little firmer, largely because beets have declined below cost of production. The primary market has naturally reacted, and is about 4d higher than when at its lowest point. Cuban and other cane sugar has advanced, as the stocks obtained before the new Cuban crop comes to market in January are smaller than the likely requirements of refiners to that period. Prices of refined have remained firm in the United States for the past fortnight, and there appears no prospect of any change.

Syrups and Molasses — With winter approaching country buyers are beginning to lay in good supplies of corn syrups, while there is also a strong demand in the cities. Prices are stationary.

Sugar being so low, the molasses market is not firm. The trade this season has been rather disappointing in cases.

Tea—The tea market is growing firmer right along. Ceylon greens are scarce, and only obtainable at an advance of fully one cent on prices of a month ago. Ceylon and Indian blacks have advanced one cent as well. This rise may be largely explained by the great demands for all grades. Planters are not increasing their acreage, while the consumption grows greater every week.

Coffee—Coffees of all sorts are firm. It appears that in spite of the 7½ million bags held under the valorisation scheme, the speculative interests have such control of the markets that they can predict higher prices with a fair degree of certainty.

Spices—There is still a shortage of supplies in the spices which explains the advancing tendency of the market, which has further been strengthened by the heavy demand for all varieties.

Cream of tartar has "gone out of sight," and it is not likely that there will be any decrease for some time.

Dried Fruits—Shipments to New York from abroad are arriving rather slowly. There is quite an active demand for new dates at firm prices, but lower figures are looked for after first demand has been satisfied. This may not be for some little time, as one of the steamers, "Cheruskia," now due at New York, is reported to have broken her shaft at sea, and is not expected till the end of December, seeing that she is now making for Bermuda.

Spot stocks of currants are limited. Malaga raisins still remain easy, while Valencias and Sultanas are not over plentiful.

TORONTO.—Canned goods show continued firmness and there is no likelihood from present aspects that an easier feeling is at hand. It is now learned that practically all stocks are in the wholesalers' hands. This refers to fruit, vegetables and fish. Regarding the latter it is stated that sockeyes have been delivered to the extent of 100 per cent. of orders, while only about 40 per cent. of cohoes and humpbacks were delivered. This is another proof that the pack of first grade salmon was quite up to the average, while the decline was, as has been previously stated in these columns, in the pack of lower grades. Northern River sockeyes are in good demand and as an intermediate fish are receiving a good share of business. Recent changes in prices have all been upward and according to the street that is the general trend of the market.

ONTARIO MARKETS

POINTERS—

Sugar—Decline looked for.

Figs.—One half cent drop.

Beans.—Somewhat easier.

Toronto, Nov. 17.—Markets have not changed materially during the past week. There have been some movements, but there is no particular feature. Sugar has made a temporary stand, but has regained none of the lost ground and it is the general opinion that another decline is not far distant.

Spices are decidedly firm, with cloves, pepper, cassia and cream of tartar furnishing the most of the excitement. Short crops are responsible for the condition now prevailing and, according to those closely connected with the market, future changes will undoubtedly show increase. Coffee is also occupying a strong position and attention is called to the statistical report that is given in another column.

Nuts and dried fruits are runnig along steadily and are being delivered by the wholesale trade just now. Dates show a slight decline but otherwise the market is firm.

Canned goods continue to increase their value and with the demand remaining firmly quotations are not likely to be held by figures that are ruling now. It is said of salmon that it is being called for now practically as heavily as in the summer months. Opening prices are for the most part not regarded by the trade now, as the basis of business is being regulated by the conditions of supply and demand.

Syrups and molasses are enjoying a heavy run of business, thanks to the weather and the season.

Sugar.—The sugar market shows a little firmness at present but it is entirely another question how long it will remain in that state. Raws are a little steadier, it seems that for the time being the market has made a stand against the downward movement that has been in progress for some time. It must be remembered that there is still a difference of twenty cents between New York and Canadian refined and while that condition obtains there is no decided feeling about the position of the home market. The opinion prevailing this week is that a decline is liable to come at any minute, although it may not be reported until after the first of the month.

Syrups and Molasses.—Demand for syrups is good and orders are coming in regularly. The market seems to be cline of five cents, but it is stated that the amount of business that is being transacted, it might be considered a little firmer. Winnipeg reports a decline of five cents but it is stated that that has no effect on the local market.

Dried Fruits.—Jobbers are still delivering dried fruits. The market is holding firmly, although, as forecasted last week, new dates are down a half cent owing to the arrival of the second shipments on Friday of this week. The reports from the street indicate a pretty satisfactory trade and it will likely continue so until the first of the year. Prices are likely to hold firmly and up to the present there have been no influences to weaken the present condition.

Spices.—A comparison of wholesale prices that ruled in New York six months ago with those existing to-day give ample evidence of strong conditions. With but few exceptions prices are higher, considerably higher in some cases; pepper, cloves, mace, cream of tartar and one or two others being especially noticeable. A falling-off in crops applies practically to all the spices affected. The demand just now is good and should receive a slight impetus between the present and the new year.

Coffee.—Locally there is a steady trade in coffee with some houses reporting better demand. There is a firmness apparent in all lines and this condition is likely to continue for some time. Willett & Gray says: "The world's visible Supply November 1st shows 2,600,000 bags less than the same time in 1909. On the present scale of receipts the world's visible December 1st will be upwards of 3,000,000 bags less than December 1st a year ago. This difference will widen during the balance of the season, but to what extent remains to be seen.

Evaporated Apples.—The situation in Evaps is not exactly clear. The market is firm and it is held that evaporators will not be able to turn out a large production owing to the light supplies of apples, the result of a poor yield.

Evaporated apples	0 10

Beans.—It is stated by those in the trade that beans do not show as uniform a quality as usual. Late rains are accountable for the stains that are noticeable on a large portion of the crop and they cannot pass as prime handpicked stock. The result is that there are more lower grade beans on the market this year with a scarcity of the better grade. Reported sales show a considerable quantity moving.

MANITOBA MARKETS

POINTERS—

Icing and fancy sugars—Trade brisk.
California Raisins—Weaker.
Syrup.—Reduced.
Sago.—Firm.
Cocoanut.—Scarce.

Winnipeg, Nov. 17.—The wholesale and jobbing houses in Winnipeg report the trade in splendid condition and goods are going out briskly and for a wide range, and it is interesting to note that orders are heavy from far away and remote centres. It is evident that the growing population of the country and the increased number of stores that are opening up in every branch of the trade have contributed greatly to the recent output of goods. In the grocery line particularly, the trade is heavy. The demand for staple goods which is supplemented by a brisk demand for winter lines and new crop stuff that have come recently on the market is exceptionally heavy this week.

Sugar.—The sugar market continues on the weak side. The merchants are pretty well stocked in general lines of granulated, and a brisk trade is going on in icing, powder and lump sugar. This, of course, is in anticipation of the holiday trade and will continue for some time.

Foreign Dried Fruits.—The sale locally of California raisins has not been heavy and the market has been weakened slightly. This is only a temporary condition, and it is believed that merchants' stocks would not warrant the decrease in the demand; next month the output will be much larger. Prunes are very stiff at the present prices. New dates are in, and a second shipment is expected next week. Prices are firm and advances will be made soon. Peaches are slightly weaker and some choice stuff has been wholesaling at nine cents. Apricots, nectarines, figs and peel are going out in large quantities.

The local distribution among the wholesale houses is not equally divided, as one house has about 15,000 lbs., while another has to be content with 1,000 lbs. Almonds and other nuts will be plentiful for the holiday trade. Prices are on the strong side.

Tapioca and Sago.—Prices are held firm in these lines and sago is quoted at ¼ cent advance.

Write us now about this new way of selling cereals

It's a way that means bigger sales at better profits. A way that enables you to give a customer more for her money, with quality guaranteed.

And it prevents you from losing by waste or deterioration.

In a nutshell, the proposition is this: Standard cereals, Flaked Wheat, Flaked Oats, Oatmeal, Graham Flour, etc., put up in dust-proof, moisture-proof paper bags, attractive in appearance, easy to handle, giving bigger weight for the money than any similar lines sold in advertised cartons. And there's a bigger profit for you than you can get with any cereals in advertised cartons on the market.

You can's afford to delay investigating this new idea in cereal-selling. If note paper is not handy, just tear out this ad. and mail it to us with your address. And do it now.

QUALITY CANUCK CEREALS

THE CHISHOLM MILLING COMPANY, LIMITED

TORONTO, ONTARIO

BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Vancouver, Nov. 17.—Following the reduction in the price of sugar comes lower quotations in flour, two staples for which there is much demand. Flour of the standard varieties is now given to the retailer at $6.90.

After being absent for some days, the best bacon is again obtainable at a higher price. The figure is now 32½ cents. There is no increase in the price of hams. There is not yet much bacon on the market, the present small supply being in the nature of a handout to the dealers.

Potatoes are very firm with $30 a ton quotation for white ones, and Lulu Islands at $26 and $27. It looks as if this article will climb high before spring.

Apples range from 90 cents for the lowest grade of cookers, to $2 and $2.25 for table varieties. Apples from the show, the fancy kind, are selling from $2.50 to $3 per box. Some very fine fruit is obtainable.

NOVA SCOTIA MARKETS.

Halifax, Nov. 17.—Fresh laid eggs are scarce and the price shows a marked advance. On the Green market this week they sold at retail as high as fifty cents per dozen. Case eggs are selling at wholesale at 27 cents per dozen. Most of the stock offering is from Prince Edward Island.

There is a great scarcity of butter of good quality on the market. Some large consignments of dairy butter in large tubs were received during the week, but the stock is poor. Dealers say that farmers have been holding this butter back for fancy prices, and that it has turned bad. This butter is quoted at 23 to 24 cents, but there is little or no demand for this class of stock.

The fruit dealers report business heavy. Canadian grapes are done, but Malagas are now on the market, and they are quoted at $5.50 per keg. The stock is of good quality. Cocoanuts, which have been rather scarce, are coming on the market in better supply, and are quoted at $5 per hundred. There is a reduction in the price of lemons, good stock now selling at $4.50 per count of 420. Apples are unchanged in price, and the supply of first class stock on the market is very limited. Some of the dealers expressed the opinion this week that there would be a probable general reduction in some lines of groceries, but as yet there is nothing definite. Though prices of flour are considered low, they would not be surprised if there was a further reduction.

ABOUT BASKET STORES.

Answer to Inquiry Regarding How They Are Conducted.

Editor Canadian Grocer — Can you give us any information re a Basket Grocery? We are informed that there are stores in some United States cities where people take their baskets to these places and have them filled. They go at leisure through the store, selecting the goods themselves, and placing them on a basket counter where they have them checked, and where they pay for them. Any information would be appreciated.

THE ARTHUR BELL CO.

Hamilton, Ont.

Editorial Note—In Lincoln, Neb., there are such stores as referred to above. They are known as the Six Basket Stores, the firm operating them being J. R. Burleigh & Co. The Basket Stores sell for spot cash, and charge 5c for regular deliveries over $1, and 15c for special deliveries or hurry trips. Everything is C.O.D. or cash on the counter. They advertise by issuing a price list each month, and a copy of this goes into every house in Lincoln.

Two delivery wagons are required, and the town divided into two sections. One wagon takes the east side, and the other the west. The aim of the proprietors is to give the consumer a low price on everything. They do some mail order business, and this, they claim, has been growing rapidly. They have a small factory in which is put up mustard, bluing and ammonia. They pack their own rolled oats, put up pepper in tins and honey in jars. They also grind their own peanut butter. The sales of the 6 stores for September, 1910, amounted to $15,885.62.

INFORMATION FOR BUYERS.

Supplied to the Trade by Sellers.

Mr. Van Doesburg, of the firm of the Biscuit Fabriek DeLindeboom, Mydretch, and Amsterdam, Holland, manufacturers of the world's famous wafer, Frou-Frou, was a visitor to Toronto last week. Mr. Van Doesburg was accompanied by H. Hamstra, Grand Rapids, Mich. It was Mr. Van Doesburg's first visit to this continent, where he intends staying for two or three months, and thereby procure a general knowledge of the trade conditions throughout the States, and Canada. Mr. Van Doesburg was much impressed with the manner in which business is carried on, especially in Toronto. The enormous business in the large stores, particularly interested him. The two visitors, were shown around Toronto, by D. Grierson, of the MacGregor Specialty Company.

S. E. Cornell, grocer, Sarnia, Ont., disposed of this business to A. H. Gammon & Son.

Peter Glavey & Son, grocers, of Ottawa, Ont., are succeeded by May & Nevine.

Practical Methods in Retail Stores

Price Cards For Customers.

Chatham, Ont., Nov. 17.—Jas. A. Mackness, grocer, 68 St. Clair St., since starting in business has made a practice of issuing from time to time convenient cards giving the prices of seasonable articles which he is featuring.

The latest card, for the month of November, contains a list of about two dozen articles, with prices. A leader is a good quality of coal oil at 12½ cents.

These lists are printed on paste-board, thicker than an ordinary post-card and about the same stiffness. They are a little larger than post-card size, and are attractively printed. A boy distributes them to residents within the store's natural radius of business, as well as to regular customers outside, the boy knocking at each door and handing the card to the housewife, instead of merely throwing it on the front steps.

These cards give better results than bills, says Mr. Mackness. Being of a more convenient size, they are in most cases preserved. The careful method of distribution ensures them a degree of attention which an ordinary dodger will not receive.

Collected His Accounts.

Ithaca, N.Y., Nov. 17.—F. H. Atwater, one of the leading grocers of this city, has been in business thirteen years. He began with one man, a boy and a horse. To-day he employs thirty-eight people, and uses eight wagons and one auto.

Mr. Atwater ascribes his success mainly to his collection system. He is very particular about his accounts, having a system of credits which tells who is owing him and how much, all the time. He has a list of weekly accounts and monthly accounts, and strictly cash or c. o. d. customers. He has the city so divided that each driver and collector has his own territory, and the accounts, such as weekly and c. o. d., are charged up each week, and it is up to the men to collect them.

Mr. Atwater has served as president of the Ithaca Retail Grocers' Association.

Antagonizing The Farmer.

Ottawa, Nov. 17.—The grocer with a large number of customers from the country cannot afford to offend them by invading what they call their territory. Such, at least, is the belief of a local grocer who has had some experience in this respect.

It has been a custom of his to bring in potatoes, apples, cabbage, etc., by the car load at times when the market was bare and the opportunities for heavy sales were good. On some occasions when the farmers were well stocked with potatoes they would quietly hint to this grocer that it was not to his interests to pursue this policy if he hoped to hold their trade. They had plenty of potatoes to sell, they said, and they did not think their grocer should thus go outside for stocks thereby depriving them of a certain amount of business.

Some grocers have a large following among the farm community while others have few people from the country among their customers. The latter can be entirely independent of the farmers and can buy and sell potatoes, etc., as they like, without fear of a farmer threatening to buy his goods elsewhere. At this time of the year hundreds of families are ready to buy their stocks of potatoes for the winter and, of course, the grocer has a good opportunity of getting this trade if he has a tempting offer to make. He generally has to compete with the market in his town and for that reason some have bought in large quantities in order to secure a favorable price.

When buying in car lots this grocer states that he always carefully looks over the ground and never buys unless the market is pretty bare. He has made a number of profitable transactions of this kind by studying conditions and then having sufficient courage to act upon his convictions. But he advises those who have farmers as customers to be careful not to antagonize them.

Complaint Against the Egg.

Guelph, Ont., Nov. 17.—A local grocer protested to your correspondent against the present method of bringing in eggs by the farmers. They are gathered from the nests, he says, until a sufficient amount is secured to make it worth while to drive to the city, and frequently the eggs by this time are not strictly fresh, resulting in an irregular supply and dissatisfied town customers. The onus is thrown on the grocer, when, in reality, it belongs to the farmer. He advocated some system among the farmers of collecting the eggs at shorter periods by one of their number, who would bring them to the city, dispose of them, and retain a commission on the sales. It would prove profitable to both farmer and grocer, he claimed. He also stated that a number of farmers are even bringing in limed eggs and passing them off as fresh.

Formal Chinaware Opening.

Guelph, Ont., Nov. 17.—The annual fall china opening of J. A. McCrea and Son, grocers, was held recently when the public and the firm's customers were given a hearty invitation to be their guests. An orchestra was present the first evening, and throughout the opening, refreshments consisting of a hot beverage, breakfast food, and cakes were served. In the china department, the feature was a table correctly set with all the necessary cut glass and china for a dinner of twelve, only the cutlery being absent. In addition to this, a fine display of hand painted china was much admired. The whole department was artistically arranged.

The Window as a Salesman.

Edmonton, Alta., Nov. 17.—A well dressed window is considered by a local grocer to have a peculiar selling power which is really worth money when every advantage is taken of it. It possesses much of the selling ability of the clerk and in most cases costs practically nothing to prepare it for use. It is often the case that when a woman enters a store she really does not know what she wants. Often, indeed, does she ask the proprietor or a clerk to advise her or to suggest something, perhaps for luncheon, supper or breakfast, as the case may be.

A window display often gives the idea, says this dealer, or even attracts attention where no thought was held of these goods. It is for this reason that this grocer pays so much attention to his windows and to counter, shelf and special interior displays.

Care of Apples Counted.

St. John, N.B., Nov. 17.—One of the local retail grocers while on a recent trip to Boston was much struck by the fine appearance of some boxes of apples from the state of Washington and ordered a half dozen boxes as an experiment. They were of fine color and flavor and when given a prominent place in one of the windows, sold readily at 35 cents a dozen. It was not so much a case of the apples being better than New Brunswick or Nova Scotia stock, as it was in the selection of the best stock and the careful packing. During the fruit show which was held in St. John last week, there were shown apples just as good in appearance and as carefully packed but as a rule, there is not enough care taken in putting up apples or for that matter, any other fruit, for home consumption. The fancy packages are generally made up for shipment outside the province and for that reason the local fruit growers have not been selling as much of their product at home as they would otherwise.

Cream Exports to United States are Increasing

The enormous increase in the exports of cream to the United States during the past year is best indicated by the following figures: During the four months ending July 31, 1908, the value of the exports of milk and cream was $24; during the corresponding period, 1909, it was $549; and 1910, $450,413.

The Grocer has many times pointed out the cause for this. The last time the United States tariff was revised the duty placed on cream was 5 cents per gallon. This is generally recognized to have been a mistake. Everyone thinks it was meant to have been 5 cents per pound which would practically have prohibited cream exports. It is estimated that this year a couple of hundred Quebec factories and 20 or 30 along the Ontario frontier exported cream to the U. S.

In spite of this butter production acording to receipts at Montreal has been in excess of last season attributed principally to the splendid pasture and increased attention to dairying in other places.

Present wholesale prices are a shade higher than those at a corresponding period a year ago—a cent in some cases being the diffierence. One is therefore led to believe that the cause of this firmness is in a great measure due to the increased demand. Wholesale provision exporters say that butter prices are too high for export and that unless prices come down the market will not be placed on an export basis.

Had the cream not been shipped to the United States, the butter production would have been greater and the surplus would have been exported. Men closely connected with the trade would not say that in such a case the price would be lower.

The first shipments of cream from Prince Edward Island to the United States were made this fall, the price being 32 cents per quart f.o.b. Charlottetown, for 50 per cent. butter fat quality. The freight is 3 cents a gallon to Boston.

Another Decline in Provision Prices

Market Has Been Steadily Dropping Until Now Dressed Hogs Are at $9and May Go Lower—Bacon and Ham Lines Are Affected by the Slump—Compound Lard is Down Slightly—Butter is Unchanged and Supplies Are Liberal—New Laid Eggs Are Scarce and Price is Firm— Poultry Supplies Coming in Freely.

The provision market has slumped again, in sympathy with the decided drooping tendencies of the raw market. Live hogs at country points went down to as low as $6.25 in some places last Saturday and in Toronto they were quoted at $6.65. Verily, the provision market has been having a merry joy ride and those who have been watching it are expecting it to be brought to a sudden stop one of these days. Once the cheese factory hogs have all been bought up supplies will not be so great. Dealers say they have no idea how long the downward movement will continue.

Dressed hogs at this time last year were quoted at $10.50 and in 1908 at $9, or the same figure that is now posted. The demand for some lines of pork has been good, but in others there has been a seasonable falling off. The drop in the price of hogs is a world wide experience and production at present seems to have struck a high mark. Compound lard that has been quoted at a rather firm figure for some time dropped back a little this week.

The butter situation shows but little change. Receipts are liberal and prices have if anything, lost ground, although the feeling is but a slight one. The closing of cheese factories has had the result of turning the surplus milk into butter which finding its way to the markets offers a second grade that is not materially different to the first, but for various reasons does not bring quite as high a price. Butter should hold its position for a time before giving away to the upward tendency that is bound to assert itself.

As far as new laid eggs are concerned they are even scarcer than before. The farmer whose hens have a tendency to lay in the winter months is coining money, but the majority of hens are the ordinary kind that refuse to work about this time of the year. Some jobbers state that 45 cents a dozen is not too high to quote as they are actually receiving it.

Poultry is coming in pretty freely, but on the whole there is no material change in this department of the market.

MONTREAL.

Provisions.—The provision market has been much the same for the past few weeks. There is this week a drop of one dollar per cwt. for dressed hogs. The market for cured meats and lard is steady, but the volume of business passing is not large as the demand is principally for small lots to fill immediate wants.

Provisions.—Prices have suffered another decline during the past week and provision men state that they do not know how long this downward movement is going to continue. It seems that it really cannot go much lower although the price of live hogs is certainly at a low figure. On Saturday some farmers, particularly those in the district of Belleville were offering hogs at $6.65. Pork and pork products having once hit the slide certainly have set up a merry pace. But the end of the ride is surely in sight. Prices are down on hams, bacon, shoulders, and dressed hogs which were quoted at around $12.50 and $13.50, not so very long ago are now bringing but $9 to $9.25. Compound laeds also show a decline.

Butter.—The local butter market is about stationary. Few if any cheese factories are now in operation and the result is that the flow of milk is being turned to a good account in swelling the receipts of butter. The result is that prices have shown no advance and for that matter are a little weaker, although they have not been reduced. From what can be learned among the trade no upward movement is expected for awhile. The supplies of creamery have been better recently and it is due to this fact that prices have held steadily.

Eggs.—Fresh eggs are about as scarce as ox-eye daisies just now and relief is by no means near at hand. As the result of the scanty offerings in new laids the price is ranging anywhere between 40 and 45 cents. On the farmers' market consumers have been paying 50 cents for the real article, and there is no likelihood that prices are going to slump in the near future. One of the local dealers is inclined to be optimistic in his views of the egg market saying that he expects to see new laids more plentiful in December than they are now. He points to the fact that the hens ceased laying earlier this year than usually and he believes they will recommence their work earlier than in former years. One thing is certain, namely that jobbers had to resort to their storage supplies earlier than they expected this fall.

Mr. Merchant:—

Are you satisfied, with your present success?

If you are, nothing that we can say will interest you——

If you are not, we know that our past achievements for others will COMMAND attention.

We believe that no merchant has the right, nor can he afford, to be satisfied with present success, no matter how great it may be..

..We have devoted many years of thought, energy and ability to securing what we consider the Greatest Specialty in the Candy line ever placed on the Canadian market.

"CHOCOLATE BORDO" is its name.

"BORDO" is a SINGLE line of chocolate (not assorted.) Just one style, ONE FLAVOR, but that's where the success lies; the unique filling and flavor that have never been equalled.

Our own success in selling this specialty has come solely as a result of the success that we have ensured for retailers featuring it. Our success has depended on "CHOCOLATE BORDO" ability to increase the success of others.

We are pleased to say our success has not been a small one.

Hundreds of merchants all over the Dominion are reaping splendid profits selling "BORDO" — They are not satisfied with old general lines of chocolates, handled by everybody. They want a leader.

Now we want a chance to SHOW YOU how YOUR trade can be increased. This will cost you nothing, and will commit you to nothing.

Urless you are a self-satisfied merchant you cannot afford to pass by this opportunity of investigating a specialty that has proved so profitable to others.

You can't lose on "BORDO."

Poultry.—In this market supplies have apparently shown an increase and prices remain unchanged. The feeling is a little easier due to the increased arrivals in some lines. There is a good demand in practically all lines and apparently the country is pretty well supplied. It is, however, a little early to begin to consider the next holiday demand and supply.

Honey.—Trade in honey is steady, but dealers are looking forward to better prices before the winter and spring are passed. They base their hopes on the scarcity of staples in the dried fruit line and believe that more trade will be turned toward honey to fill the gap. Prices may be slow in going up, but if the conditions expected, materialize the higher basis is likely to be quoted.

Eggs.—Fresh eggs are 35 cents per dozen this week, candled stock is 30 cents and the demand is good, supplies are coming from the south as the production is light in the province.

Butter.—Creamery stock is jobbing at 30 cents per pound and considerable advances are expected soon. Dairy butter is 27 cents and a large portion of the supply comes from the east at present.

Cheese.—There is no change in prices but the demand is much better. It is believed here that the consumption will be heavy within the province this winter.

Millers Say Wheat Prices are Too High

And That For That Reason If They are Maintained at Their Present Figures An Increase Will Have to be Made in Price of Flour—Wheat Market Has Changed But Little, In Spite of General Bearish Influences—Demand for Wheat and Oat Cereals is Heavy and Steady Trade is Reported — A Resume of Conditions Giving Two Views That are Held.

The wheat market has held its own during the past week in spite of the fact that the general news from the world's markets was of bearish character. Prices fluctuated a certain extent and there was considerable activity on the Winnipeg and U. S. markets, but there is not much change from a week ago. One recent report was as follows: "It was difficult to determine the effect the statistics of supplies and shipments had on values, but the truth remained that it had many times taken less optimistic reports and estimates to produce a result replete with havoc. The vigorous character of trading on the northwestern marts appeared to be the market's mainstay."

Among millers at the present time there are two opinions. One is that prices of flour are likely to go up before long. They claim that wheat and flour prices are not proportionate and that they are not making money with flour at its present figures.

The others point to the bearish influences from other countries where trading is heavy, such as Russia and the Danubian provinces and also to Australia and the Argentine where the new crops are said to be in excellent condition. Stocks seem to be piling up all over, and the United States and Canada are by no means exceptions. The Canadian visible supply showed an increase of 1,253,000 bus. against a decrease last year of 124,000 bushels. The total visible wheat supply for last week was 48,889,000 bus. the previous week, 40,368,000 bus., and last year 28,787,000 bus.

The following bulletin from the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa, should be of interest:—The ratio of increase of the present year's yield over that of 1909 was 8 per cent. as computed from the data which appeared in the September bulletin. The information available on publication of the present issue reduces that ratio of increase to 3.9 per cent. Chief among the factors contributing to this result is the addition of the figures for France, which exhibit a decrease of 95,256,000 bushels, as compared with last year's yield. This percentage relation will be further modified after inclusion of the figures for Argentina, where harvesting, on an area in wheat over 1,000,000 in excess of that harvested last season, will begin probably towards the close of this month and continue into January. A material difference will also result from the recently issued revised returns from Russia, involving a reduction of 50,000,000 bushels in the yield of the winter wheat crop as compared with the preliminary figures reported last month.

MONTREAL.

Flour.—Activity in the flour market is not pronounced yet, buyers evidently not having regained confidence in the situation. In consequence, the volume of business is small. The stock of flour in store shows an increase of 7,732 barrels compared with a week ago, and a decrease of 1,313 compared with a year ago.

Flour.—Some local millers say that if the wheat market remains at its present figures they will have to advance the price of flour. It is claimed that flour is not bringing sufficient returns to make a fair profit with wheat at its present quotations. Bakers are taking an opposite view of the situation. They are looking for lower prices and there is yet considerable trade to be done in this way. Millers state that they are pretty busy as there is a steady demand for flour. If, as it is claimed, the trend of the flour market is dependent upon wheat prices, as it nearly always is, the question of higher or lower prices will have to be allowed to solve itself. The wheat market has been fluctuating between rather limited figures and stimulated at times by questionable causes. At present, reports convey the information that wheat is plentiful in the Dominion and the long-expected export trade has not materialized to any appreciable extent.

Cereals.—The demand for both oats and wheat cereals is heavy. Prices are remaining firm, but some claim that they should be higher with raw material at present quotations. They state that it may not be long until they raise prices and that in any event the trend of the market is in that direction. Mills are busy on account of the present heavy demand and its expected continuance through the season.

FACTS ABOUT ADVERTISING

By The Advertising Manager

X

Most of you have come in contact, at one time or another, with a case of advertising hysterics.

And it is well to absorb the fact right now that there is never anything hysterical about really good advertising.

Good advertising is a sane, sober, serious proposition.

When advertising will not stand the test of ordinary business logic—in every particular—there's something radically wrong with it.

It's a simple proposition when you come to look at it in the right light.

Nothing at all mysterious about it —not a thing.

Just straight business all through.

As practised in many instances, advertising is a science—not yet an exact science, but pretty nearly so.

As practised in many other instances it is anything but scientific.

I could prove this by some campaigns that are running to-day.

The scientific campaign dovetails snugly into the system by which a line of goods is distributed.

Generally speaking, the object of advertising is to assist the sale of goods—

—not to really sell them—

—for it is only mail order advertising that ever actually completes sales.

And mail order advertising is only a small fraction of one per cent. of the total. Therefore, we can eliminate it from our calculations, for the present, at any rate.

Keep that word assist in your mind. It's an exaggeration to describe the chief function of advertising in any stronger term.

Now let's start at the beginning.

First of all, we have the system of distribution—the channel down which goods must go from factory to consumer.

That channel has been established a long time, and every manufacturer's product has to follow it.

There is no choice in the matter.

Therefore, finding a new channel of distribution is not one of the functions of advertising.

The work it will perform is that of getting behind the goods and helping to shove them down the channel already established.

Because it is necessary to supply a propelling force, we infer that there must be obstacles to overcome in the marketing of goods.

These obstacles are:

1. Lack of knowledge.
2. Lack of confidence.
3. Competition.
4. Human nature (indifference, if you will).
5. Prejudice.

They begin with the jobber.

They extend to the retailer.

They are found among consumers as well.

Advertising is the most effective method of leveling these obstacles.

It spreads knowledge about the goods.

By doing so it creates confidence in them.

It lifts them out of the rut and makes them conspicuous among competing lines.

It overcomes prejudices.

It reconciles the goods to that human tendency on the part of distributors to follow the line of least resistance.

The scientific campaign recognizes the existence of the above-mentioned obstacles at all points in the channel of distribution, and it applies the remedy at all points.

It gets behind the goods at the factory and sees them right through to the consumer.

No point is neglected.

It's a steady shove all the way— —with the least possible friction.

The first problem presenting itself is that of assisting the goods onto the dealer's shelves.

The second is that of creating demand among the consuming public.

Information requires to be imparted in both cases.

It must be designed to create confidence in the goods, make them conspicuous among competing lines, etc.

The fact that this information takes one form for the dealer and another for the consumer does not affect the general argument I am advancing. The principle is the same.

Therefore, I submit that advertising of a high order is just as essential in the case of the dealer as in the case of the consumer.

It seems inconceivable that there should be the slightest difference of opinion on this point.

I will pursue the subject further in later issues. I purpose going into this matter pretty fully, in what I hope will appeal to manufacturers of food products as a fair-minded, logical way.

The reason she wants a "cheaper" flour is because she wants to "save" money.

But she certainly is not saving money if the flour she buys makes less bread per pound, less results for the same energy, material, fuel.

If the flour she buys makes her foodstuffs less nutritious, less wholesome, less pure, palatable, appetizing.

She is spending just a little less money—true, but she is getting less value for what she is spending.

Another unfortunate victim of False Economy, since in order to save (?) a very insignificant difference she is liable to lower her pride as an A1 cook and breadmaker.

Explain to her as you really know how that—

Five Roses is the best buy

Exceptional value, both as to purity in itself and as a uniform producer of desirable breads and pastries.

Throw your sturdy salesmanship into the balance, Brother Grocer, so that every new face may become your permanent "call again" customer.

A reliable source of steady profits.

Help her avoid the bitterness of failure—she will repay in gratitude, trade, enthusiastic recommendations.

And your name will appear in her successful recipes which every "star" cook distributes among envying friends.

No other flour milled in Canada to-day will give you such returns in satisfaction for your selling efforts.

All the pushing you are devoting to that "cheaper" brand would soon make FIVE ROSES a "buy" word.

If others are doubling their sales, why not YOU?

New Fruits Arrive in Good Condition

Sicily Lemons and Navel Oranges That Arrived Recently Are of Good Color and Are in Fine Condition—Apples Firm and Higher Prices are Quoted in Some Places — Vegetable Prices Are a Little Firmer, Due to Increased Demand, Accompanying the Colder Weather—Grapes are Moving Pretty Freely Yet and Malagas are in Good Demand.

The apple market is decidedly firm, with prices reaching to higher levels on some markets. The scarcity is likely to be more generally felt later on, and the form of relief is not easy to foresee, that is if there is any. In some markets a high price is being asked, and reports say that in all probability they will go higher.

New lemons are on the market, and show pretty good quality. Some of them might be a little better in color, but the most of them look well, and the others will lose what greenness they possess in a short time. New California navels are also being offered by wholesalers this week, and in color and flavor they are splendid for first arrivals.

Grapes are moving out yet, and there is also a good demand for Malagas. The colder weather is improving the demand for vegetables, which here and there show a slight stiffening.

Tomatoes of the home grown variety are off the market, and future supplies will have to be imported. The season prior to Christmas begins to indicate good business, and jobbers look for a realization of their hopes.

MONTREAL.

Green Fruits.—As the season advances the scarcity of apples is becoming more pronounced. There has been a large business done year after year, and a failure in the crop, such as occurred this year, and consequently high prices causes a most undesirable reaction. Some cranberries are being sold at fairly attractive prices. Bananas are moving freely at figures which are well maintained. Holly and evergreen are already being pushed by fruit merchants.

Vegetables—The coming of the colder weather is responsible for higher prices on several lines this week. Supplies are smaller, and it is only reasonable to expect a falling off in trade, under the circumstances. Tomatoes are up to $1; cauliflowers have gone up to $2.50, while sweet potatoes are higher by 25c. Parsley is not so plentiful, and costs more this week.

TORONTO.

Green Fruits—New navel oranges and new crop Sicily lemons arrived this week, and are now being offered for sale. The navels are in good condition, being almost uniformly of good color, and a little care will give all of them a good appearance. The new lemons are likewise of good color, and altogether this new fruit is most satisfactory.

There have been heavy sales of apples throughout the country during the past week, in spite of the small crop this year. Of course, the total crop is small compared with the average, but the amount of business passing of late has been heavy. Local wholesalers report a good trade, with prices for the best fruit ruling as high as $5 and $5.25. Florida oranges are showing to better advantage recently, and are apparently receiving the bulk of the trade. The new California fruit is expected to gradually creep in on the trade. There has been a fair demand for citrons of late. Grapes are still in demand, and are moving out fairly well. Pines are arriving practically only in express lots, and the demand is but trivial.

Demand for Fish Shows Improveme

Some Variation in the Reports as to Supplies, and Recent Catches, but Both Inland and Coast Markets Say There is a Better Demand for Fish—Gloucester, Mass., Famous as a Fishing Port, Purchases Supplies From Canadian Fishermen — Frozen Fish are Now Moving Freely—Mackerel Are Practically Done for the Season.

A more active market is generally reported from the large Canadian fish centres. Statements regarding a fish famine are received at times from certain ports, but they are followed by encouraging news from other fishing grounds. However, though, there is a certain amount of uncertainty on this score the general feeling is one of satisfaction.

Wholesalers say the demand for fish is increasing and certainly the oyster dealers are experiencing much improved conditions. With a certain revolution in the oyster trade the new methods should appeal to the public.

There have been reports in some papers of late to the effect that certain persons who had become ill blamed oysters and clams, which they had eaten as the real cause of their illness. These statements going unchallenged are likely to do injury to the trade and it would be in the interests of the retail and wholesale trades if they were to at least consider this question.

QUEBEC.

Montreal, Nov. 17.—Fish trade is active and supplies are not over plentiful As navigation will be closed in the course of a few weeks, large orders are booked to be shipped during the next few days.

Green cod keeps scarce at good figures, while herrings in pickle are in good demand with the supply large.

Four loads of frozen fish are now in transit from the Pacific Coast and Manitoban Lakes. It is expected that prices will rule much the same as last year, though the large quantities of frozen salmon booked for foreign markets may affect the local market for this product to a certain extent.

In shell and bulk oysters trade is at its best and will probably keep on so till Christmas at least. Prices are unchanged.

NOVA SCOTIA.

Halifax, N.S., Nov. 16.—The local markets are almost bare of fresh fish. The receipts during the past week were the smallest for many months. There is no halibut offering except a few fish taken out of cold storage. Only small quantities of haddock and cod have been marketed. While there is no fish famine the markets are in an extremely bad condition. To make matters worse no smelts were marketed during last week.

There is plenty of salt codfish offering, and also pickled herring. The cod is of good quality, but the herring are poor. Dealers say that the quality of herring during recent years is far below the average, and that it is almost impossible to get any choice Labrador stock. The winter run of herring has struck in at Bay of Islands, Newfoundland, and a dozen U. S. vessels are now there loading up to the hatches. Some Nova Scotia vessels are also taking in cargoes. None of these herring have arrived here as yet, but they will be along in the course of a few days. Usually these fish are of good quality, being fat.

Oysters continue scarce and high. The local demand for P. E. Island stock is not great, owing to the high prices. The choicest oysters are sent direct from the Islands to the Montreal market, where the demand is heavy.

The mackerel fishing for the season is about over. During the past week a few scattering fish were taken along the western shore, and they brought fancy prices.

BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Vancouver, B.C., Nov. 17.—While the week before last the fleet of one company was in port with fresh halibut from Alaskan waters, last week there was nothing doing. The weather was not so favorable for fishing. November being the bad month. Next week, it is expected, that some more of the boats will be in. Frozen fish of all kinds is moving freely. Shipments are being made to all parts of the United States and Canada, the price here being five cents. In Boston, the frozen fish sell for nine cents, while in Toronto, where competition is not so keen, it is one cent more. The freight rate is the same.

Prices generally rule the same. It was expected that halibut would have advanced a peg ere this, but it is still at four cents.

MANITOBA.

Winnipeg, Nov. 17.—The fish output is heavy and the demand is growing for a wide range of supplies. Oysters are forming the bulk of the trade just now. Whitefish, halibut and smelts are popular.

ONTARIO.

Toronto, Nov. 17.—Jobbers report a good trade in fish. Haddie and other smoked lines are in better demand and show a considerable increase in the business done. There is a decided call for frozen halibut, and really the bulk of the trade seems to be in this line. Dealers should remember that with the first of December, Advent begins, a season when the demand for fish is bound to take a leap. The time to prepare for this is now in order to be ready for the extra demand. Oysters are moving out well. Some dealers are quoting their selects at $1.90 an advance of five cents on the old price. Others state that they have no reason yet for moving their price up another notch.

Points to Consider when Buying Oysters

First, be careful that all the oysters you buy are over four years old.

See that they come from "Communities" (as oyster breeding grounds are called) that are noted for flavor.

Be sure that they are matured sufficiently firm to retain their full flavor for the longest time possible.

Decline all stock that has been watersoaked.
Insist that all the stock you buy be refrigerated at a low temperature, but never frozen.

VERY IMPORTANT

It is of the utmost importance that oysters be refrigerated properly all the way from the point of shipment to your store.

If this is not attended to it may well happen that your stock becomes unsaleable in a very short time.

DISPLAY HINTS

Display is another very important consideration—or rather, display and storage.

The "Coast-Sealed" Cabinet is to be recommended for this purpose. It has a vacuum insulated chamber between the inner and outer walls—a construction that results in great saving of ice. The interior arrangement of this cabinet allows part of the stock to be stored under ice continually, while the other part—for current sales—rests on ice.

We recommend "Coast-Sealed" Oysters, because they conform to every requirement mentioned above, and have never yet been known to disappoint a customer in quality, quantity, or flavor.

We shall be glad to communicate with any merchant regarding constant supply of the best oysters grown and the closest prices going.

NEW BRUNSWICK.

St. John, N.B., Nov 17.—There was a slight improvement this week in the fish market. Haddock and cod are coming in more plentifully and a lot of chicken halibut are also being taken. The latter are caught on the trawls along with the cod and haddock.

On the Miramichi river the fishermen are making plans for the expected harvest of smelts. It is stated by those directly interested that there will be more nets set this year than ever before on the Miramichi. Smelt from this district are shipped to points all over Canada. The little fish are reported quite plentiful now, but the best hauls are looked for when the ice forms on the river.

While the sardine catch has been small this season compared with other years, several of the fishermen have made big hauls.

A meeting of representative lobster packers and fishermen at Charlottetown, P.E.I., last week, protested against the new regulations requiring more space ⅜between the laths of the traps and larger meshes for head nets. They declared the enforcement of the regulations means the ruin of the industry, as the factories would have to close down. They recommend shortening the season as the best way of preserving the fishing. A resolution to that effect passed, also another that pending consideration of their request, the government suspend the new regulations for one year.

A correspondent in Digby reports better line fishing in the Bay of Fundy last week. About 250,000 pounds of cod and haddock were landed in Digby.

NEWFOUNDLAND.

S. John's, Nov. 17.—Since last report prices on cod oil have advanced, $5 on hardwood casks and $4 on softwood. Tinned salmon is a little easier, but other prices remain the same.

The "Sealshiptor"

The best policy of OYSTER INSURANCE is to see that you get your oysters in a SEALSHIPTOR the only way genuine Sealshipt Oysters are shipped

Sealshipt Paper Pail

How Sealshipt Oysters are Transported in Sealshiptors from Bed to Dealer

SEALSHIPT OYSTERS are shucked and packed directly at the beds. The solid meats are packed in SEALSHIPT containers, which are air-tight and germ proof, and cannot be opened during transit. The SEALSHIPTOR itself is properly insulated and practically air-tight. It will keep oysters in perfect condition. Genuine SEALSHIPT OYSTERS are not packed for shipment in any other way—be sure you get yours in a SEALSHIPTOR, because then you know they have the real "tang" of the sea, the natural flavor that will delight your customers.

How You Should Sell Them

Since you know you are handling genuine SEALSHIPT OYSTERS, advertise the fact to your customers by using SEALSHIPT PAPER PAILS. We are making these pails a feature of our magazine advertising, and people look for them, as well as the SEALSHIPTICASE, to identify genuine SEALSHIPT OYSTERS. These pails are the only ones cut to exact measure, they are made of high-grade waterproof paper, and have wire handles for convenience in carrying. We supply them at small cost to you, including the printing of your advertisement on the top flap.

Our Local Advertising Helps

SEALSHIPT OYSTER AGENTS make money because we help them. We give you attractive blue and white muslin signs, a blue and white steel sign for your store front, a transparent sign for your door, and arrange with you for the instalation of a SEALSHIPTICASE, the blue and white porcelain fixture for the storage and display of SEALSHIPT OYSTERS. People are instantly reminded of our magazine advertising by these means and know you are selling the genuine SEALSHIPT OYSTERS they have read about. They will leave a store that sells no oysters, or only ordinary oysters, and go to the store where genuine SEALSHIPT OYSTERS are sold. Be the one to secure this trade; it means increased oyster business at a profit that can't be less than 25 per cent. Write for our catalogue and full particulars.

Odds and Ends from Here and There

How Peanuts Grow—Selling Groceries by Weight Instead of by Measure—Best Season for Handling Dates and Figs Now Passing—Co-operative Delivery in the United States—Direct Buying Question in New York—France in Need of Potatoes.

The peculiar thing about a peanut is that it grows in two ways—on a bush and like a potato. The first step in the process is the planting of a single peanut. From that a bush grows, lying close to the ground. A branch stretches out close to the earth, and sends up into the air shoots on which are little yellow flowers, like buttercups. Directly beneath these flowers, growing straight downwards, small, sharp pointed shoots appear, like thorns. They are called "pegs," and grow back into the ground. It is at the end of these "pegs" that the peanuts are found.

"The best season for handling dates and figs," said a wholesaler recently, "is from now until after the New Year. The stock is fresh and wholesome and it is at its best in appearance. The retail trade, as a rule, disposes of a large stock during these months, although from that time until the next crop is received the sales continue, but not to the same extent. There is a good demand for both dates and figs and a grocer should not have much difficulty in increasing his sales."

The Guatemala coffee crop is reported exceptionally good this year. The Mexican crop is also heavy. In the state of Chiapas it will be more than 20,000 tons, or more than double the yield of last year.

In numerous small cities throughout the United States, co-operative delivery seems to be working well. With the check system every order costs the grocer to deliver, 5 cents. It does not matter whether it is a bar of soap or two barrels of sugar. By this method the customer gets better service, it is claimed, than the average grocer could give her. By having five deliveries in every part of the city daily the plan has been found to cost less than two-thirds of the former expenses.

Three million pounds of California prunes were recently shipped to France and Germany. One authority remarks that this was necessary because of short crops in Europe, and that the United States fruit packed in French and German boxes with foreign labels will be returned to the United States and sold as genuine French prunes.

Direct buying from manufacturers and packers instead of through ordinary jobbing channels has grown so rapidly in the retail grocery business of Greater New York that it is roughly estimated that at least 10 per cent. of the total number of retailers are getting the bulk of their goods in this way. The chain stores, purchasing exchanges and department stores control a considerable proportion of New York's trade. The total number of stores buying direct is 977. There are approximately 10,000 retail grocery stores in New York city. The chain stores and buying exchanges have dealt a hard blow to the fixed price policy according to those in favor of it.

"Now is the time for American farmers to ship potatoes to France," says a New York authority. "They are so badly wanted that the French Government, which long ago put a ban on them for supposed hygienic reasons, now admits them free."

Potatoes, which form a staple diet, particularly for the army, now sell in France for a dollar a bushel.

Grocers of Dayton, Ohio, are in favor of selling by weight, but say that it will be hard to accomplish it as the peddlers will continue selling by measure. They favor trying to secure passage of a state law compelling all to sell by weight instead of using the dry measure.

Beginning Nov. 1 and acting under resolution adopted by the Columbus (O.) Retail Grocers' Association, all members sell by weight fruits and vegetables and everything else now sold by measure. This action was taken as a means of fighting the market man, whom the grocers charge with flim-flamming the public by short measure.

The retail grocers of Youngstown, O., are now selling groceries by weight in conformity with a city ordinance recently passed, although the system has been in vogue in some establishments for some time, and is proving satisfactory. But the sale of butter and bread and such other articles as the new ordinance says must have the weight stamped on them, is causing some confusion. As regards butter, it is a question whether the retailer should stamp the weight of the print, or the farmer who puts it up.

Mail Order House Threw Out Baits

A Hundred Pounds of Sugar Sold for $1.75 — But Purchaser Had to Buy Other Goods on Which the House Made Big Profits—Articles Sold Not Always According to Representation.

The Globe Association of Chicago, a mail-order concern selling groceries direct to consumers through agents has gone the way of all fakes. The president was recently arrested by the post office authorities on the charge of using the mails to defraud.

There was nothing complicated about the Globe Association's scheme. Agents in different States paid $7.50 for outfits. They in turn sold membership tickets in the association for $2.50, which gave them the privilege of purchasing groceries or any other article at alleged wholesale cost. Many persons, it is charged by the postal authorities, sent in orders and received goods other than those which they ordered or inferior to those represented. Seldom, it is declared, would the firm make amends.

Baits Were Thrown Out.

All of the advertising was on the "bait" order. The piece de resistance was 100 pounds of sugar at $1.75, the loss being of course made up by skinning other articles.

Sugar was, however, only one bait. Usually a list of proprietary and other articles marked at a 50 per cent. or more reduction was sent to agents but consumers, if they wanted one of these bargains had to buy an assortment of other goods. None of the reduced articles could be purchased separately. The assortment besides the bargain article would include spices, coffees, teas, etc., which would make up for the "bargains."

WLIL TEST ITS LEGALITY.

Method of Balloting for Library as Operated in Several Ontario Towns is Said to be Contrary to the Law.

Toronto, Nov. 17.—From information received it is evident that steps are about to be taken to test the legality of the coupon system referred to in The Grocer a few weeks ago, as operated in Ingersoll, Ont., and which has found root in one or two other municipalities. The same system has been instituted in Burlington, Ont., and tentative plans were under way to open it in Newmarket, but it is not known whether it is being carried out in the latter town.

The plan as previously explained is something similar to the trading stamp idea of former days. The merchant buys a number of coupons which he distributes to customers with purchases of a certain amount. The purchasers use these coupons as ballots, casting them in favor of some local institution. The promoters of the scheme offer a library of a certain number of books to the church, or other institution which receives the most ballots at the end of a certain time. The aggregate sum paid by the merchants is $250 and just what the value of the library may be, is not known.

At any rate, the scheme was declared contrary to law by the town solicitor of Ingersoll. E. M. Trowern, Dominion Secretary of the R. M. A., also declares that it is illegal. Other parties who have considered the question do not agree with these statements. Steps are therefore being taken to test the legality of this method of presenting libraries to public institutions at the expense of the local merchants.

Into a general store of a town in Arkansas there recently came a darkey complaining that a ham which he had purchased there was no good. "The ham is all right, Zeph," insisted the storekeeper.

"No, it ain't, boss," insisted the negro. "Dat ham's shore bad!"

"How can that be?" continued the storekeeper, "when it was cured only last week?"

The darkey scratched his head reflectively, and finally sugested: "Den maybe it's had a relapse."

Isn't it worth while to handle a line that the women want? Such a line is which produces a lasting jet black polish in the minimum of time and with the minimum of 'elbow grease.'

Moreover there's a 'worth while' margin of profit for you in selling "Black Knight."

Nature has solved the problem of distribution. It uses a multitude of agents to effect the distribution of its products.

Nature does not expect every seed to fall upon fallow ground and to take root. But, it achieves a profitable percentage upon its distribution. This is all that an advertiser has to do to reap a profitable harvest on his outlay.

ST. CATHARINES, - ONTARIO

For One Thing, I Have Been Extremely Interested in the Advertisements. I Was Particularly Struck With One of

—Wm. Clark Co., of Montreal, dealing with Chateau Brand Pork and Beans, on the back cover of a special number. It moved me to order a number of cases, and they just came in a few days ago.

"In reading The Grocer weekly from cover to cover, I have received so many benefits that I find it difficult to particularize.

"I have charge of several departments and receive a great many trade papers, but The Grocer is in a class by itself."

The above was written several months ago by the manager of the grocery section in a Hamilton department store.

The manager of the grocery section in a Montreal department store says:

"I look for The Grocer's appearance every week, and give it a cordial welcome each time it reaches me, knowing I shall find sound information and helpful advice in every one of its pages. I appreciate your paper very very highly."

WHICH BRAND WOULD HE CHOOSE?

IF a man were starting in business with the intention of carrying only one line of each of the different articles sold in a grocery store, which brand of laundry soap do you think he would be likely to select? If he asked the housekeepers of the country to decide for him, which one would they choose? Or suppose his clerks were young men of experience in the grocery business and they were asked to make the selection. We do not need to answer these questions, because it is quite patent to every business man who reads this paper that SURPRISE so far surpasses all other laundry soaps in the esteem of people generally that the man who tried to secure and hold trade with any substitute would soon find his customers making tracks for another store. His clerks would tell him they wanted the SOAP that is easiest to sell; and the women of the country would say: "Give us the old reliable brand" SURPRISE, which washes everything to a healthful cleanliness without the necessity for hard work —the soap which makes child's play of wash day.

And so in deference to the wishes of his clerks and the needs of his customers he would be forced to the belief that while there might be other brands on which the selling margin is greater, there is none that all things considered is so profitable and in every way so satisfactory as SURPRISE.

"CANNED by GRIFFIN"

Until you break the shell of a nut you are wholly in the dark as to the quality of the meat therein. A fair exterior often covers an unsatisfactory interior. Quality depends largely upon reputation—you've got to be guided by that. Be guided, then (if seeking highest quality in Canned Fruits), by these three words, "Canned by Griffin," and you'll be absolutely safe.

Griffin & Skelley Canned Fruits and Asparagus

Canned Apricots, Canned Peaches, Pears, White Cherries, Black Cherries, Damson Plums, Egg Plums, Golden Drop Plums, Greengages, Raspberries, Strawberries. By the three words, "Canned by Griffin," you know these products as safe canned fruits to buy and sell.

Supposing we were to say that there are 75,000 Keith Systems in use that probably would not be misstating the facts, but that would not convince you that you should have one.

Supposing we were to say the Keith System has been upon the market for the past 15 years, twice as long as any drop-leaf loose-slip system, and that it has been improved from time to time so as to meet every requirement of the retail merchant, we would be telling the truth, but that wouldn't be giving you any of the advantages of the system.

HERE ARE THE THINGS YOU WANT TO KNOW:

1. Is the Keith System Fire-proof? Yes.
2. Is there any danger of bringing forward a wrong past account or losing slips? No. The original slips remain permanently bound in the book, giving you a consecutively numbered record of the account, and only one account is before you at a time.
3. Can more than one clerk work over the register at the same time? Yes, any number, without the least confusion.
4. Will it place a check on forgotten charges? Yes, the best in the world.

REAL TRUE CREAM AT LAST

Mr. A. McGill, the Chief Analyst to the Inland Revenue Department of Canada, wrote in Bulletin 144, as far back as under date 3rd June, 1903:—"The word 'CREAM' is largely used to designate condensed milk This is incorrect and SHOULD BE MADE ILLEGAL. As a matter of fact, these so-called 'creams' are not any richer in milk fat than sugared condensed milks, and many of them are distinctly poorer. Among the samples examined ONLY ONE (No. 25628 which contains 25.20 per cent. of fat) IS ENTITLED TO BE CALLED CREAM."
This one sample was prepared by FUSSELL & CO., Ltd, LONDON AND NORWAY.

FUSSELL'S GOLDEN BUTTERFLY BRAND CREAM

Is REAL CREAM and contains from 25 to 30 per cent. milk fat. Condensed milks the so-called "Evaporated Creams" —contain about 8 per cent. only.

Practical Methods in Retail Stores

How Clerk Lost a Good Customer by Sending Account for Collection—Chatham Grocer Makes Attractive Honey Display—Coffee Grinder Draws Custom — A Winnipeg Letter Sent Out to Customers and Probables—A Display of Bakery Products.

Bad Blunder in Mailing Accounts.

Vancouver, B. C., Nov. 24.—"That's how a store loses a first-class customer," remarked a dealer to The Grocer this week, as he hung up the telephone receiver. It transpired that notices were sent out to the firm's customers, asking, if possible, that the accounts be settled weekly. The complainant in this case was a big customer who had been in the habit of paying every week. When this notice was received it was not liked, and forthwith the store was rung up to close out the account.

"If the clerks acted with just a little discretion instead of mechanically," the dealer continued, "it might not have occurred. As it was, it never entered her head that there might be some one on the books who did settle weekly. Such people need no hints to pay up."

A Honey Display.

Chatham, Nov. 24.—The idea of featuring honey in an interior display was recently adopted by John McCorvie & Sons, grocers. A silent salesman in the front part of the store was devoted entirely to honey, extracted and in the comb.

The bottom of the silent salesman was covered with sections of comb honey, laid so that they slanted upward to the rear of the case, each row slightly overlapping that behind it, after the manner of shingles. These combs had a single price ticket, 15c. On the first and largest plate glass shelf large jars of extracted honey, with a 20c price tag, were displayed in the midle of the shelf, ten sections of honey-comb, neatly grouped, being piled at each end of the shelf. On the next shelf above smaller jars, priced at 15c, occupied the middle space, with seven sections of comb grouped at each end. On the narrow top shelf, a group of 10c jars, flanked on each side by three sections of comb, formed the display. Other sections of comb honey, piled on edge, occupied the top of the show case.

The idea of featuring honey in this manner is a new one, and for this reason the display attracted all the more attention.

Coffee Grinder Attracts Crowds.

London, Ont., Nov. 24.—It is a long time since Scandrett Brothers installed their coffee mill in the west window of their grocery store on Dundas street, but there has never been a time when it has not paid for its room in advertising value.

Run by an electric motor in the cellar, the mill used to be almost continually a centre of interest for a little crowd on the sidewalk, and the same thing is still to be seen at times. While closed in on the store side also by a window, the mill is still in a fairly convenient position for use. The capacity is five pounds of coffee beans at one time, but of course no great quantity of ground coffee is kept around. Even hotels and restaurants, Scandrett Brothers find, prefer to buy as small a quantity as possible, and there are few people who grind their own coffee.

What goods are displayed in the same window as the mill are always appropriate. Last week, for instance, tins of cocoa and chocolate were tastefully arranged.

Criticism of a Circular.

Winnipeg, Nov. 24.—Here is the way Geo. Nicholson, a local grocer, heads a circular recently sent out to customers and prospective customers:

WANTED
500 WORKING MEN
To Send Their Wives to
GEO. NICHOLSON'S
For Their Groceries.

Following this Mr. Nicholson quotes several articles such as butter, Worcestershire sauce, catsup, and coffee, giving a little talk about each and the price. For instance, about tomato sauce he says: Our tomato catsup just gives the finishing touch which means so much to a cold dinner. To introduce, 20 cents bottle.

This latter kind of advertising is to be commended, but it might be considered by many advertisers that the introduction could be made more effective by a straight talk to workingmen, such as: "We want all workingmen and their wives to know about our cheap prices on groceries—compare these with the regular prices, and figure out how much you save." As a general rule people do not want to be fooled, even a little bit, and when an advertisement with a heading as, "Wanted 500 Working Men" refers to something not conveyed therein they often say, "Oh, that's only an advertising scheme," and throw away the paper or letter. A straight business talk is generally conceded to be more influential.

Bakery Products Separately Displayed.

Chatham, Ont., Nov. 24.—The idea of utilizing an entire silent salesman for the display of bakery products has been adopted by the Bradley & Sons store here.

A silent salesman in close proximity to the front door is used, the lines displayed including bakery cakes, cookies and similar fancy cooking, as well as loaves of bread. In a recent display the bottom of the show case was covered with a popular chacknel biscuit, recently introduced.

No Name on the Calendar.

Hartford, Ont., Nov. 24. — B. W. Thomas, general merchant, here has decided on a change in the manner of sending out calendars this Christmas.

"It is the usual method to have the firm's name printed directly on the picture," he says. "This year we have an extra nice calendar, and instead of defacing the picture with printing, we paste a 'Season's Greeting' card over the pad, so that after reading, it can be torn off. Another card 'Compliments of B. W. Thomas, etc.,' is pasted on the under side of the pad, and so the name is left on the calendar all the year."

The card on the outside of the pad reads as follows:

SEASON'S GREETINGS.

We take this opportunity of expressing our thanks to you for your thoughtfulness during the past, in helping us in our business. We appreciate what you have done, very sincerely.

And now we ask for the coming year of 1911, a continuation of your favor, and we will endeavor to serve you to the best of our ability.

B. W. THOMAS
Hartford, Ontario.

There is no printing establishment in Hartford, and Mr. Thomas does his own printing and press work, and it is very neatly done too.

SUGAR BEET PRODUCTION.

Increase Over That of 1909—Three Sugar Factories Supplied.

Ottawa, Nov. 24.—A Census Office bulletin issued recently, says that sugar beets are grown most extensively in Ontario and Alberta, where they supply roots for three sugar factories. The area in crop this year is 16,000 acres, which is a substantial increase upon last year. The yield per acre is 9.69 tons, the total yield 155,000 tons and the quality 93.15 per cent. The roots supplied to the Berlin factory are testing 17 per cent of sugar and at the Wallaceburg factory 16 per cent; but a product of 5,000 acres in Ontario is being shipped to factories in Michigan. The product of 8,200 acres in that province is marketed at Wallaceburg and Berlin where the average price is about $5.86 per ton or better than $57.80 per acre.

The Ups and Downs of the Sugar Market

Review of the Changes Made in Prices During the Past Two Years—In 1909 Prices on the Whole Were Lower Than During Present Year—Present Price The Same as Prevailed on the 1st of January.

The fluctuations of the sugar market during the business year would be of real interest to the grocer if all possibilities of his being "caught" could be removed. This danger can be guarded against to a certain extent by closely following raw and refined markets, considering the influence of supply and demand and applying the judgment that years of experience has established.

Even then, however, the trade find themselves at sea at some particular crisis when the ordinary rules do not seem to apply and the next price movement appears to be a matter for conjecture only.

Supply and demand are two influences that in a general sense indicate the movement of the market. In regard to demand, the grocer knows the seasons when it is at a maximum or minimum as the case may be. Sugar is indeed a staple and therefore brings a steady trade the year round. But the fruit seasons are responsible for the increased business and it is not difficult to gauge that tendency.

Crop conditions is another force, but the grocer cannot be quite as intimate with it as with demand. However, reports are at his disposal, and practically without exception they are accurate, showing the condition of growing crops in all the countries considered as sources of supply. Therefore by following these reports he can in the most cases follow the trend of the market. But the other ticklish critical situations must be cleared up by their own unfolding. It is at such times that jobbers and brokers will tell you "Well, now, you know just as much about it as I do," which wise remark is not going to be of much benefit to the retailer.

Always an Uncertainty.

Looking back over the past summer several occasions are recalled when the sugar market was veiled in considerable obscurity. One occasion was marked by a statement of this kind. "I see that raws are a little easier, due to favorable crop conditions. There is not as much sugar moving out as there was showing a decrease in demand for refined. In fact the height of demand is about passed and I would say that a decline is likely to happen. However, it may not be felt for three weeks or a month and it might come this week. Yes, I would be surprised if sugar were to go up, but under present conditions I don't think it will."

That sums up opinions offered some weeks ago when the price showed a tendency to lose the position it had held. It was, however, really not backed up by heart-whole confidence.

"According to past market movements there should be a decline some time in the near future," was another opinion, and again in this respect there is more indefiniteness. Thus, it may be again remarked that there is generally more or less uncertainty to this market, an uncertainty the retailer does not relish for he likes to buy when the price is going up, not when it is likely to tumble the week after he has given an order.

Price Changes for Two Years.

A comparison of the movement of the market during the past two years should be of interest, and is given herewith.

Prices are quoted on standard granulated, Montreal basis and in bags. The 1909 review evidences the following changes :

January 1	$4.35
February 5	4.45
March 5	4.35
March 12	4.45
March 19	4.55
March 26	4.65
May 7	4.55
July 30	4.60
Sept. 10	4.70
October 15	4.60
November 19	4.70

As will be noticed the market held pretty steadily during the summer at an advance occasioned by the heavy

The following letter from J. T. Petrie, St. Catharines, Ont., proprietor of the American Bazaar, explains the above cut: The Canadian Grocer, Toronto, Ont,—"I have taken notice of your cuts in The Canadian Grocer of special window displays, and think they are very good. By following up the idea given in The Grocer for the dressing of a Hallowe'en window, one of my clerks, Allan Douglas, dressed a window very effectively. I am sending a picture of it under separate cover."

demand. But there was no weakness with the close of the year. The new crop showed a scarcity and the new year opened with the price at $4.70, and with the demand fair.

The review of the present year on the same basis is also interesting :

January 7	$4.70
January 21	4.80
February 25	4.95
March 4	5.05
May 27	5.15
August 5	5.05
October 7	4.95
October 14	4.85
October 28	4.70

The price is now where it was at the opening of the year. The general feeling seems to be that a lower figure will be reached. The crop has been unusually heavy this year, and beet sugar is a factor owing to the heavy yield. This year it will be noticed that the highest price was made about the time strawberries were coming on the market, and it was held during the period in which the other small fruits were being offered. The real slump commenced during the first week of October after the preserving season had spent itself and when new crop reports coming in gave evidence of weak raw markets.

Six-for-a-Quarter Principle Discussed

Retail Grocers Endorse Action of Soap Manufacturers in View of the Fairer Profits Received—Some Emphatic Condemnation of Dealers Who Cut Prices—Association Does Not Seriously Object to Accusation That They are Being Held Responsible for Increase in Prices and Profits on Soap.

Toronto, Nov. 24.—Those grocers who are raising half-hearted objections to the advance in the price of soap, and to the decline of the 6 for a quarter principle, were criticized by members of the Toronto Retail Grocers' Association at their regular meeting on Monday night. The question was opened by J. S. Bond, who recalled the resolution of the association made at the October meeting, and the fact that since that time matters had turned out just as they had desired.

From what one or two of the members stated, there are some travelers and retailers trying to make capital out of the allegation that the Retail Grocers' Association was responsible for raising the price of soap. One member said that the other day a traveler for a wholesale house while in his store blamed the association. This raised the ire of another member who emphatically declared that if that traveler had told him the same thing, he would have kicked him out of the store, and informed his house that henceforth his business with it had ended. If in place of knocking the association to other retailers, the traveler had pointed out that the advance had aided them in making a better profit and a fairer profit on soap, he would have been of a great deal more service to those he called his customers.

W. C. Miller had advanced his price to 5 cents straight, and found no difficulty whatever. It didn't affect the sale of soap as far as he was concerned, and on inquiring from his customers as to which they preferred, the present bar at 5 cents straight or a smaller bar at 6 for a quarter, they had answered in favor of the former.

J. M. Cork pointed out that a large department store had cut the price to 6 bars for 27 cents, but J. S. Bond waived this aside with the remark that, "It does not matter about the department stores; we should stick to 5 for a quarter—those people change their prices almost every day, and if we tried to follow them we would be going up and down all the time."

A. White spoke of the annoyance caused by competitors cutting prices, stating if this is done one will sooner or later have to meet them. R. Davies cited a case where a grocer was still selling at 6 for a quarter.

Never Schooled in Cutting Prices.

"When we have a chance to make a fair profit," said D. W. Clark, "we should accept it. It seems strange that men who call themselves merchants will always persist in giving goods away. This price-cutting business all depends on the way a man is schooled; I never learned it, and I therefore never do it." Mr. Clark raised his price on soap as soon as the advance to him was known, and he has had no difficulty whatever in selling just as much soap.

Once the public become thoroughly acquainted with the advance in price, considered W. C. Miller, no one would have any difficulty, and in order to bring this about he suggested that a resolution be forwarded to soap manufacturers, advising them to let the consumer know through the press the reasons for the advance. The trade had been pretty well informed now, and if the public knew all about it, the dealer would be more easily able to sell.

On the matter of profits Fred Thorne advised dealers to watch carefully their selling prices, and if they did this they would stand to make fairer profits this winter than they had been making.

One member told of a competitor selling canned tomatoes for 10 cents, and another even for 3 for a quarter.

Here was his version: "A customer asked me the other day what I charged for canned tomatoes; I told her 2 for a quarter. She said that B—— was selling them at 10 cents a can, and that he (the competitor) had advised her to purchase a dozen, for they would be going up some of these days." Evidently he did not know the cost price now.

A similar case was cited about a biscuit sale: "A lady had been buying a tea biscuit from me at a certain price. Then she ordered a whole box, and when I sent the bill she claimed that I was charging her too much; she could buy a single pound for 16 cents from the grocer across the road. I asked her to find what he would charge her by the box. She did so, and reported that a box would cost her 15 cents per pound, whereupon I told her to go and get them, and hurry up too.

"The other fellow was certainly losing money, and the only way I can explain it is that he probably noticed '13' on the box and he took it for the cost."

D. W. Clarke intimated that half the grocers didn't know the cost of goods, and claimed that if, in the case of biscuits, they were invoiced at retail prices with a discount off for profit, no mistakes could be made. He told of an instance where a dealer was selling a meat sauce for 10 cents which really cost him about 19, but which he thought only cost him about 8 or 9 cents. He was, and naturally too, getting the most of the meat sauce trade in his district, but was losing a lot of money.

Twenty Per Cent. Little Enough.

J. S. Bond criticized retailers for many of the small profits now being made. "We shouldn't always blame the wholesaler and manufacturer," he maintained, "for in a great many cases its our own fault. We should at least make 20 per cent. profit (on sales), and no merchant can live much under that."

President D. McLean characterized free deals as harmful. "It gives the dealer a chance or an excuse to cut," he said, "and ought not to be countenanced by manufacturers. Let them place a regular price on their goods, and if there is anything to be given, let them give it to us who are their agents."

It was then moved by F. Thorn and W. C. Milier that, "This association endorse the action of soap manufacturers in raising their prices instead of decreasing the size of the bar, and that the manufacturers be asked to explain to both consumers and dealers the exact reasons for the advance." This motion carried.

The association felt pleased rather than hurt to think that they were being held responsible for the advance in soap, and the better and fairer profits accompanying it. They were sure that all retailers would eventually endorse what had been accomplished and, while they had known that on acount of the advances in soap ingredients, soap would sooner or later advance or the size of the bar would be decreased, they did not feel disposed to contradict any of the allegations being made against them.

The association is still growing. On Monday night four more members were admitted. At the December meeting nominations of officers for 1911 will be held, and there will also be discussion on a motion introduced by W. C. Miller to have bi-monthly instead of monthly meetings. David Bell brought up the question of a mid-winter entertainment, and this will also be discussed at next meeting. Indications point to a banquet instead of an At Home. The winter's bowling games are also under way. T. Clark and F. Thorne were appointed captains, and they chose their respective teams on Monday night.

SHORT SHIPMENTS IN DRIED FRUITS.

Figures just compiled show that shipments of Valencia raisins from Denia, Spain, this year, by the two direct boats, Bellona and Jacona, arriving in Montreal, were 92,800 boxes of 28 lbs. each, against 158,240 boxes in 1909. This means a shortage this season of 65,440 boxes.

Currants shipped from Patras by the same boats totaled 27,675 half-cases, against 47,200 in 1909.

These figures speak for themselves. Recent reports advise a decline of 3 shillings on the Denia market, but the drop does not mean much, considering the impossibility of getting fruit ordered now until January, when holiday trade is over.

AN INDISCREET TRAVELER.

The other day a traveler, while in a retail dealer's store in Toronto, accused the Toronto Retail Grocers' Association of putting up the price of soap. The incident was ventilated at the last meeting of the association and is fully described in another column.

In the first place, this traveler should have the interests of the retail trade at heart, because he depends on it for his bread and butter. Therefore, when the way has been opened to the retailer to make a fair profit on any article, a traveler should do everything in his power to co-operate with him.

Instead of doing that, he "knocks" an association which is striving to place the grocery business on a better basis. We can only believe that he has been misrepresenting the association to members of the trade who are not in the organization, probably inciting them to raise a cry to the consuming public that they are not to blame, but the members of the association are. If in his travels from store to store, he would say, "I am glad to know you are now getting a fairer profit on this or that, and I hope you will stick to the new price," etc., he would be assisting the men on whom he has to depend and making them better merchants and, therefore, of more value to himself.

It is to be hoped that no more of this will be heard. Anyway, no dealer who reasons the matter logically will accuse the Retail Grocers' Association of doing anything they shouldn't do if they are instrumental in securing for him a fairer profit on an article he handles.

CHRISTMAS A MONTH HENCE.

Standing on the brink of another Christmas, retail dealers everywhere are now planning for a heavy trade. That the trade will be heavy is the only natural condition of affairs to be expected because of the universal prosperity everywhere.

Stocks of all kinds suitable for this trade have to be purchased, and herein often lies success or failure. For if mistakes are made in quantity, suitability or quality, Christmas is apt to be unfruitful and even disastrous to the dealer. This coming holiday time is, therefore, quite often a season of anxiety.

To buy the proper quantities of goods is one of the principal goals to be reached. This is more difficult to the new merchant than to the old, providing the latter is able to readily determine from his books what he has been usually purchasing.

A dealer must not be too conservative and stock no novelties at all. Particularly is this the case so far as the country merchant is concerned. At Christmastime people are looking for things a little bit out of the ordinary. Common sense and past experiences are necessary requisites in this regard, for, while these people will be more free with their money there are limits beyond which they will not go.

Whatever the dealer intends to do, however, in the way of novelties, he should do it now. While purchasers may not actually invest in Christmas presents at this early date, many will nevertheless make up their minds by reading advertisements and observing the interior and window displays. Convince them now that you have what they want and in place of sending or going outside for presents, they will come to you.

There are only four more weeks before Christmas.

LESSONS DEARLY BOUGHT.

Retailers cannot be too careful with fire. While the store may be insured, yet it is very seldom that the merchant gets his actual loss, not taking into consideration the loss of time and inconvenience he is put to when fire does occur.

Read this brief despatch and note carefully what damage a little bit of carelessness causes:

GROCERY STORE ON FIRE

A lighted match thrown under the counter caused a fire last night which did $200 damage to the grocery store of Mrs. C. Gingras, 564 Demontigny street east.

Some lessons are very dearly bought. The time will soon be here when there will be a great deal of inflamnable material about the store and warehouse so that particular attention ought to be given to prevent loss by fire.

MAPLE SYRUP ADULTERATION.

Out of 134 samples of maple syrup collected in Canada during April and May of this year, 117 were found by Chief Analyst A. McGill to meet the present standards for that article.

This inspection shows 12 per cent. adulteration which is an improvement upon the former condition of the article since 1905. In March 1905 out of 97 samples 76 or 82 per cent. were adulterated. The percentage in May of the same year found to be adulterated was 41. It is gratifying to learn of this tendency towards better and purer goods.

INCREASE WINTER LEMON SALES.

Grocers may not all realize that lemons can be sold well in winter. The popular idea seems to be that lemons are wanted mostly for cold lemonade in summer and that therefore the heaviest business is to be looked for during that season.

The winter months, however, must not be overlooked. In fact, it has been stated by a prominent lemon dealer that he handles more lemons in winter than in summer. This fact is largely due to the seasonable requirements for lemons that are peculiar to winter. The lemon makes a splendid hot drink and does good service in this form in fighting colds. It is also largely used with oysters.

With a little effort by retailers the demand for lemons could be increased and if every household realized the different uses of lemons there would be a new era for lemon growers. Some retailers have prepared pamphlets setting forth the merits of the lemon and distributed them among consumers. Methods of this kind are required to stir up a demand to its maxim.

The Markets—Coffee Still Advancing

ONTARIO MARKETS

POINTERS—

Coffee—Price advancing.
Canned Salmon—Pinks are higher.
Sugar—A little firmer.

Toronto, Ont., Nov. 24th.

Decidedly a feature in this week's markets is coffee which for some time has been aviating with practically the whole business world for an audience and which endeavors to establish a new record every week. Short crops are generally conceded to be almost entirely responsible but speculation is not being overlooked and received part of the blame. Consumption of coffee has reached a high figure and as yet the demand continues at a high mark.

Some Canadian manufacturers state that they are shipping coffee to American cities and those in a position to offer stocks afloat can turn them into New York and receive a good profit. It is said that there are practically no spot Rios in Canada and the firmness thus occasioned is shared by Mexicans, etc. and in fact the whole coffee situation is a decidedly strong one.

In canned goods there is continued strength. With the first of December wholesalers are looking forward to an automatic raise of 2½ cents a dozen in all canned goods. The demand is keeping up well and jobbers are not anticipating any cessation of present conditions.

Sugar.—The market shows a little firmness this week, the result of a stronger feeling in raws. Jobbers state that the demand is practically nothing to speak about. There is an expressed opinion that no lower level will be reached during the rest of the year owing to the fact that prices are now so low that the profit must be pretty well pared. On the whole the situation is not much changed from a week ago, the slight gain being in itself of no great consequence.

Syrups.—Locally the demand is somewhat easier this week. Deliveries have been rather heavy of late and it now seems that the trade are supplied for the time being.

Dried Fruits.—The primary market in Valencia raisins is easier, but the trade is not paying much attention to this report. They state that the short crops warrant the prices that have been quoted and that no permanent weakness will be felt under the present crop supplies. Prunes are firm and show even a stronger feeling than last week. The prices now quoted for raisins will not affect the Christmas trade for they will arrive too late. Buyers, however, are stated to be few, those who tarried being still content to wait.

Nuts.—Jobbers are steadily shipping goods, filling orders for Christmas. Prices are firm and for the present the outlook is a strong one. Further shipments may make the position a little easier but the general opinion is not in favor of that idea, believing that the primary market especially in walnuts and almonds fully warrants the present prices.

Coffee.—The excitement in coffee continues this week unabated. The local houses who expressed themselves on the subject considered that speculation is not absent from the influences that are at work. "Advices tell of short crops" one jobber said "but I can't help thinking from what I have read that the bulls are deeply interested." The influences include the following, a crop below the average now being marketed, the 1911-12 crop even smaller than the last. The Brazilian visible supply afloat and ashore for the United States is over a million and a half bags less than at the same time last year. The world's visible supply is nearly 3,000,000 bags less than same period in 1909. These and a few other conditions are responsible for the strength that is apparent and for the prices that refuse to remain stationary.

Teas.—The following figures compiled by the London Board of Trade give the amounts of the importations of teas into Canada for the ten months from January 1st to October 31st, 1910, and a comparison is made with the importations during the same time a year ago.

From British East Indies, except Ceylon, 1,791,308 lbs. in 1910 and 1,814.546 lbs. in 1909 and 1,424,508 lbs. in 1908.

From Ceylon.—2,532,323 lbs. in 1910 as against 2,466,559 lbs. in 1909 and 2,520,081 lbs. in 1908.

QUEBEC MARKETS

POINTERS—

Molasses.—Prisk sales.

Valencia Raisins.—Weak but small stocks.

Grenoble Walnuts.—Ccarce.

Coffees.—Advanced prices.

Montreal Nov. 24.—There is a feeling about that while the production of sugar would warrant a decrease in price of refined, the market is reaching a foundation. Reports for instance emanate from Cuba that if prices are low for raws during May and April it is feared that the late spring cane will not be cut until next year as the grinding of it would not pay. This is an indication of the nearness of bottom prices. From the present outlook of course there is nothing to justify an advance.

Sugar—Reports state that the latest European estimate is nearly one million, eight hundred thousand tons more than the output of last year, but it is generally admitted that present prices are pretty close to cost of production.

It is not expected that the pressure of the Cuban crop which comes to hand in January will have much effect on the Canadian market, because prices in New York have not declined to the same extent as in Europe.

Starting from last September European quotations dropped from 12s to 9s, or 65 cents per hundred, while the decline in New York was only 25 cents.

Syrups and Molasses.—There is a good demand for syrups. The feast of St. Catherine will be celebrated by French Canada at the end of the week. An old-time custom attached to this feast is the making of molasses candy. In consequence the demand for molasses, which has been pretty weak lately, has grown stronger, but it is not expected to hold up.

Dried Fruits.—The season is now somewhat advanced. Import orders are mostly all received, and some few repeats have already been placed.

Valencia Raisins.—Since the demand has fallen off prices have somewhat receded, but shippers reported stocks remaining on hand in small compass. They will probably be soon exhausted.

Currants—An active demand has prevailed, reducing stocks considerably. The market has, therefore, advanced, and prices are now held firmly.

California Raisins.—Have apparently touched bottom. The low prices prevailing have cleaned up a considerable proportion of the crop.

Prunes.—Continue to show strength, and what few small sizes are obtainable are commanding a premium.

Evaporated Fruits:—Peaches are the only variety offering to any extent, and in view of the high prices asked for apricots and pears will no doubt find a ready market.

Dates.—First tide shipments via London should be now afloat, and considerable sales are being made at something under New York quotations.

Spices.—The high prices are still maintained, and local dealers see no prospect of a decline. The demand for spices is becoming strong, and it is not unreasonable to expect slightly higher prices in the near future.

Nuts. — The markets are firm in all lines. Walnuts are arriving in good condition, and are being taken up rapidly at the high prices prevailing. Grenobles are now exhausted at the price of growth, and other varieties are in limited supply.

Filberts have recovered the recent slight drop, and almonds of all kinds are steady.

The prices of new shell walnuts show an advance of nearly 100 per cent. over last year's quotations; in fact all future arrivals will sell at a high level.

Tarragona almonds remain firm, and there is no change in Pecans.

Coffee.—Coffee still shows an upward tendency. A heavy increase in primary market has taken place in Rios and Santos, while an increase ranging from five to seven cents is also shown on Maracaibos. Local prices are affected or will be soon. An active business is being done in all directions. A crop of 10½ millions is expected for the next Santos output. This means that Brazil will have control for at least two years longer, as production is evidently below the requirements of consumers, and prices must advance until consumption is actually affected.

Worth While Recommending

A lady just starting a grocery in Toronto got in an order of Red Rose Tea and with it a sample for herself of the 40c. black grade. A few days later she wrote as follows:—

"Having used the sample of your tea, must say that without exception it makes the most delicious cup of tea that I have tasted since I came to Canada, four years ago.

"Shall be pleased to recommend it to my customers."

IMPORTING POTATOES.

New Brunswick Dealers Find Their Export Demand Heavy.

St. John, N.B., Nov. 24.—The potato situation in New Brunswick is rather interesting just now. The crop this year was short, much below last year, while the demand seems to be as great if not greater than at this time last season.

Already about half the New Brunswick crop has been shipped to points in the west, from Sherbrooke, Que., to Calgary, and in order to fill orders for the Cuban market, which has developed so rapidly in the past few years, the New Brunswick shippers are importing potatoes from Aroostook county, Maine, and shipping them to Cuba in bond.

According to one of the largest shippers in St. John there have been shipped, or are in transit or stored in warehouses, about 40,000 barrels raised in the state of Maine. The duty on potatoes in Cuba is 11 cents less than is charged for entry into Canada. At the present time there are in the cold storage warehouse at St. John, about 30,000 barrels, awaiting shipment to the Havana market.

In addition to the Maine stock, there are about 35,000 or 40,000 barrels of New Brunswick potatoes in storage, shipped or in transit to St. John for the Cuban trade. The present price of the New Brunswick potatoes is $1.25 per barrel, while the price in Maine is 95 cents per barrel.

The demand from the west this year has been greater than ever before, the dealers say, and this has made it necessary to import the U. S. product in order to supply the demands of the trade with Cuba. The western buyers are paying $1.25, f.o.b. at point of shipment.

The city council of St. John recognizing the importance of this growing trade, have arranged to make one of their large warehouses on the western side of the harbor, frostproof, so as to afford ample storage accommodation for the shippers. The work is now being done and the shippers say that it will be of great value to them. Last year, owing to insufficient warehouse room, they had to store a lot of stock in cars, entailing much trouble and expense in keeping the potatoes from freezing.

INFORMATION FOR BUYERS.

Supplied to the Trade by Sellers.

It will be of interest to the produce trade throughout Canada to learn that Howard B. Clemes, a director and secretary-treasurer of Flavelles, Limited, Lindsay, also a director of Flavelle-Silverwood, Limited, London, is severing his connection with these companies to assume the management of the produce department and Toronto branch of Gunns Limited. Mr. Clemes will devote his energies principally to the development of Gunns Limited's extensive egg, poultry and cheese business, for which he is peculiarly qualified by his experience of over twenty years in the Canadian produce business. Gunns Limited, are congratulating themselves on securing Mr. Clemes' services, and his appointment is a further step in the aggressive, up-to-date business policy which characterizes this company's operations.

The wholesale trade have just been advised that "White Swan" Yeast Cakes will make their appearance about January 1st. They will be manufactured by the most successful dry yeast maker in Canada, with an active experience of nearly a quarter of a century, from a distinctive formula which has been in use for the best part of a century and by the most modern and up-to-date machinery in existence for the purpose. An attractive advertising campaign is being arranged covering hundreds of publications so that the consuming public will be quickly made acquainted with the article.

Stanley Douglas, of the Soo branch of Gunns Limited, spent the week end in Toronto. He says that Easi-First lard is still an easy first in that district and will continue to be so.

Present Situation in Provision Market

Live Hogs Make a Stand Against Declining Prices, but Some Consider it Only a Temporary Reaction—Others Inclined to Believe the Rebound Has Come to Stay — A Return to Higher Prices Does Not Seem to be Immediate — Butter and Eggs Firmer as Supplies Fall Off.

The provision market has gained nothing during the past week, but butter, cheese and eggs each shows more or less firmness. Live hogs in some places made a slight recovery, but opinion is divided as to whether this gain is nothing more than temporary.

Many reasons are heard just now explaining the slump the provision market underwent or is undergoing. Some say that influential U. S. pork manufacturers fearing a reduction of the tariff let go the market in order to reach a low price. Thus, if the tariff on pork were considered they would be able to point out that U. S. prices were decidedly low. According to some they are lower than Canadian prices just now. Others say that some of the big houses to divert attention from them, or to gain sympathy of the people, have reduced prices because of certain difficulties the law has made for some manufacturers. The heavy corn crop is given as a reason, for with heavy food supplies the feeding and fattening of hogs is not such a financial tax on the farmer. The farmer with fifty or sixty hogs, averaging from 150 to 200 lbs., will not likely be pleased by the recent decline. It is likely that the knowledge of the supplies held by farmers has been instrumental to a certain extent in influencing the manufacturers. It is a difficult problem to try to come to a conclusion in regard to how far the decline will go, and among jobbers different opinions are held.

Eggs are becoming scarcer and likewise dearer. New laids are as scarce as ever, and the storage variety has suffered numerically by the extra demand occasioned by the hens ceasing laying earlier than usual.

MONTREAL.

Butter.—There is a strong feeling in the butter market, although stocks in cold storage are heavy for this time of the year. Quite a number in the trade are of opinion that the stock will be exhausted before spring. The market was strong at the country points, sales being made at St. Hyacinthe at 24½ cents to buyers.

Since the factories in the province have closed down, roll butter is beginning to come in, and is meeting with good demand.

There is a decided scarcity of new laid eggs. A small supply would command a premium price.

Provisions.—The market seems to have made a temporary stand against the declinig market of the past weeks. Live hogs advanced ten cents over last week's price, but the rest of the market did not show much change. Pure lard dropped again, and with the exception of the stand in the price of live hogs the market has shown a downward tendency. Asked for his opinion on the market and its future, a prominent uocal provision man said that he considered the reaction had already set in. It is noticeable, however, that the price of pork, lard, etc., for May delivery is much below the December delivery figures. While this dealer maintained his opinion, he admitted that it was simply out of the question to correctly estimate the situation. Another dealer considered that the higher price for hogs was only temporary, and he expected to see prices remain rather easy until next Spring.

Butter.—The butter market continues along in a steady way with so far no exciting features. Dealers are falling back upon storage stocks. Shipments have decreased. Poultry.—Supplies were plentiful this week. One large wholesaler stated that there were heavy supplies in all lines but turkeys, and they were only fairly plentiful. Prices are holding steady, but the outside price for turkeys is a little higher. From various sources it is gathered that the supply of turkeys is not as large as it might be. Those who have been through the country state that they expect to find supplies not quite as plentiful as last year. Another Reduction in the Price of Flour

Change Came Earlier Than Was Expected, but was Due Largely to Competition Among the Big Mills—Wheat Market has not Changed Appreciably—One Result of the Decline Should be an Added Impetus to Flour Business — Cereals Firm and in Good Demand—Flour Industry in Canada is Growing and the Cutting of Prices Evidences Reverse to Trust Methods.

Flour declined 20 and 30 cents a barrel this week, due, to a large extent, it is understood, to keen competition among manufacturers. Those authorities who looked for higher and lower prices, respectively, giving their reasons for their views, were really both wrong. They did not take competition into consideration, and it might be remarked in passing that the Canadian flour industry is growing. If one casually looks over the list of big mills, whose daily output extends from 1 000 bbls. to 6,000 or more, he will admit that there is a great quantity of flour produced every day in the week. The manner in which this competitive condition has operated to reduce prices has been illustrated at various times and still another instance was recorded early this week.

Competition was probably not the only influence at work, according to millers, but it certainly played a rather active part. It has been said of late that bakers had not bought as heavily as usual nor entered into contract with the mills for supplies, because they were not satisfied with the price, and looked for lower quotations. Trade has not been as brisk as it might be and export business could be much improved. It is hoped that this last reduction will increase the demand and brighten the flour business in general. It is likely that at the new price the enquiries from importers will be better and thus the cut is expected to at least serve one good to the trade.

Millers have stated that with wheat at its present price they were not making a fair profit, but with another reduction the position would seemingly be worse from their standpoint. The wheat market has not changed appreciably during the week. It has been up and down over a rather limited range, and, if anything, has been slightly stronger. The general conditions at present should indicate a firmer feeling. Hence, the slump comes as a slight surprise to the general outsiders.

In rolled oats there is a feeling of satisfaction arising from the heavy business that is to be expected at this season. As far as is known, the mills are running about to their limit, with the demand remaining firm and at a good figure. The position in oats is considered strong, and while some millers state that prices may go up before long, such a move is not looked for just now.

The Canadian visible supply of wheat decreased 840 000 bushels last week, as against a decrease of 881,000 bushels a year ago.

MONTREAL.

Flour—The feature of the local flour market was the weaker feeling which developed in spring wheat grades, as prices declined 20c per barrel. The tone of the market for winter wheat flour was also easier, but no change took place. Country orders are not very numerous, but there is a fair inquiry for spring wheat grades from European sources.

TORONTO.

Flour—There was not much change in the flour situation during the past week. The present reduction in prices is expected to stir trade into activity. The decline is mostly held to be due to competition.

Special Delivery Rule Was Enforced

Grocers' Association in Barrie Stuck to Their Guns and No Difficulty is Now Experienced—Late Saturday Night Deliveries Belong to the Past—Co-operative Fruit Buying During the Summer—Purchased by The Car Load, and Brought in by Freight.

Barrie, Ont., Nov. 24.—The Barrie Retail Grocers' Association which was formed here last spring are congratulating themselves on the successful workings of the association. Recently they announced in the papers of the town their thanks to the public in general for their support of one of their rules made and successfully carried out this summer in connection with the delivery system—a system which was thought at one time could not be carried out.

The rule applied to the hours which goods are to be delivered, as follows: Goods ordered before ten a.m. are delivered before twelve; goods ordered between ten and twelve a.m. are delivered before four p.m.; goods ordered between twelve a.m. and four p.m. are delivered before six p.m.; goods ordered between four and six p.m. are delivered before ten a.m. next morning; an extra delivery on Saturdays as follows: goods ordered between four and six p.m., are delivered before nine p.m.; goods ordered after 6 p.m. Saturday delivered Monday a.m. before ten. On days before holidays the delivery rule applies the same as on Saturdays.

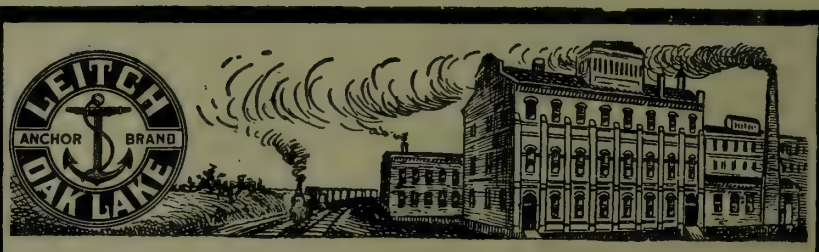
All stores were closed at seven p.m. week nights and ten p.m. Saturday nights. All the merchants closed their stores Wednesday afternoons during June July and August, with a couple of exceptions and one of these was a fruit dealer. This same fruit man did previous to this time quite a large wholesale business with the local merchants, but the association on his refusal to join with them and close on Wednesday afternoons, cut him off and refused to buy further from him.

Bought Fruit in Quantity.

They held a meeting and formed a plan on which a trial was to be made and if it proved successful was to be carried out all season, viz., one merchant was to go down to the Toronto fruit market, taking with him orders for all the others and load a car every Wednesday p.m. The merchants purchasing were to be at the freight siding early next morning and unload their goods.

The fruit always arrived in good shape and just as good as express, so it is claimed. The plan proved to be workable and so was carried out successfully until a short time ago. Every other week a different business man did the buying.

The association also was the means of bringing together merchants who at one time had been at loggerheads and now are good friends and work together.



Probably the most difficult thing to overcome in the delivery system was the refusal to deliver any goods after six p.m. on Saturday nights as in the old way it was nothing to see a loaded grocery waggon start out on a route at half past nine p.m. It was overcome though by hard work on the part of the men at the head of the association, and also by advertising and when the first Saturday night came and people who used to have their goods sent up were seen trudging home with their parcels under their arms everyone knew that the grocers meant what they advertised and from that time out few thought of asking the merchants to break their delivery time table.

Potatoes and Cranberries are Higher

Potatoes are Apparently Being Held Back by the Farmer, Who is Dissatisfied With the Price That has been Ruling—Jobbers Now Quoting at Advanced Figures—Cranberries are Firmer and an Advance of $1 a Barrel is Likely to be General in a Few Days—Oranges and Lemons are Easier and are Coming in More Plentifully.

A slightly easier feeling in lemons, oranges and grape fruit, and higher prices for cranberries, potatoes and onions are some of the features of the fruit market this week. Apples are holding steadily, showing higher prices for the best quality stocks, and it is generally considered that the prices yet to be touched will likely be extremely high. California apples are bringing a fair price and are moving out easily. Canadian grapes are nearly done, and it will likely be but a short time now until dependence will have to be placed upon Malagas. They will certainly be the grapes that will meet the Christmas demand.

Potatoes are higher for the simple reason that jobbers cannot secure sufficient stocks. They are not a unit on the reason for this state of affairs, some claiming that the potatoes are not in the country, others that the farmers are holding back supplies in order to force the price higher. The latest crop bulletin for Ontario gives the potato yield this year at 21,927,804 bushels, from 168,454 acres, or 130 bus. per acre. Last year it was 24,645,283 bus., or 145 bus. per acre. The annual average is 116. That shows the present crop less than last year in Ontario, but above the average. There have been reports from different parts of the country referring to rot, but up to the present the crop has been considered not far below the average. The Dominion Government report says prices may reach a famine point before spring. This report points to a crop in all Canada this year of rather more than one-quarter less than last year. In the United States the crop is also short, the condition on Oct. 1st being 72 points, against nearly 78 points a year ago. Not only is the Canadian crop short, but a good deal of rot is reported, which will tend to a still further reduction in supplies.

Cranberries are quoted higher at points of shipment, and it is likely that the general prices will be raised before long. Business on the whole is keeping up well. New lemons and oranges are in good condition and likewise in good demand.

"Never were our oranges sweeter," says one despatch. "We will put out the best fruit the east has seen for the holiday markets, and supplies, even though the crop is larger this season, will be short of the demand."

MONTREAL.

Green Fruits—Apples still rule high, with a strong demand for them. Spies and Fameuse are scarce and bringing big prices. The general fruit trade lately has been good, and business is brisk this week. The first arrivals of California oranges are to hand and in good condition for early fruits, while supplies of new Messina lemons have also come in. The fruits are of superior quality, and in good condition. The price of cranberries should be higher, seeing that the quotations for apples are so stiff. A rise is expected immediately the cooler weather sets in. Florida pineapples show a decrease of 50c.

Vegetables—Local dealers expected a decided slump in U. S. beans as a result of the New York strike, but, on the contrary, there was quite a scarcity in the market and from $5 to $9 more were realized. The prices which have ruled are decidedly abnormal. They still rule high. Florida peppers generally arrive in carriers of six baskets, the latter being sold separately. As there has been a poor demand for the latter of late, larger bushel baskets are now going more freely. Parsnips have gone up considerably, while Spanish onions, parsley and garlic are all selling well at an advance. There are practically no Montreal potatoes on the market; Green Mountains being well taken, at an advance of 5c.

TORONTO.

Green Fruits—Business continues to assume fairly large proportions and local dealers are handling a good supply of all fruits now in demand. Apples are firm, with prices for choice stock ruling all the way up to $6. California varieties are being brought in and sell at about $2 a box. They are splendid in appearance and have claimed quite a demand. At the recent apple show one of the fruitmen showing spies would not accept an order at less than $6 a barrel. That was his price, and if you did not like it, why, there were others that did. The limited supply is holding the market with decided firmness. Cranberries are announced at an advance of $1 a barrel. The price had not been raised here early this week, but it was expected to be quoted at the new figures at any time. The high price of apples is given as one of the reasons for this advance, the increase being in sympathy with general conditions. Oranges are coming in freely and are a little lower in price. Navels, Floridas and Mexicans are all being offered. The quality is said to be uniformly good and with the new lemons they are giving satisfaction. Lemons are arriving a little more freely and are easier. The demand keeps good. Canadian grapes are nearing the end of their tether. It will not be long until the imported varieties will have to be depended upon.

Vegetables—The changes in the vegetable market are not as numerous as in fruits. Potatoes and onions are quoted slightly higher, and some of the dealers are asking as high as 90c for potatoes. One of them stated that he had been through the country lately and could hardly buy any supplies. He stated that he secured a rather small stock, but that was the limit of his success. In his opinion, the potatoes seem to be in the country, but the farmers have likely become discontented with the price they have been receiving, and are holding back for a higher price. This dealer said that he was not sure of the exact situation, but that was the way it appeared to him. He added that the total supply may not be as heavy as expected. At any rate, potatoes are showing an advanced price, and while 85c is the general price, there are some asking 90c.

Fish - Oysters

Scarcity Adds Strength to Fish Market

In Some Lines Higher Prices are Being Quoted — Others are Decidedly Firm—Oysters are Not Plentiful and Demand is Hardly Being Met in Some Places—Smoked and Dried Fish are Moving out Well—Market Satisfactory, But Would be Improved With Supplies Coming in More Freely.

Scarcity in some lines of fish is responsible for recent advances. Codfish and haddock are quoted higher and smoked fish stocks are almost low enough to make an advance a likelihood. From all reports, it seems a fact that the season has been unusually light and hardships among the fishermen are likely to be experienced.

Supplies of fish are quickly bought up evidencing a good general demand. Fresh fish might be more plentiful for the supply does not seem to be equal to the demand. Dried and smoked fish are also moving out rapidly. Oysters are scarce and in good demand.

NEWFOUNDLAND.

St. John's, Nov. 23.—Several price changes have occurred in fish markets here since last report. All codfish have gone up, the advance being generally 30 cents per quintal. Lobsters have advanced $1 per case and cod-oil is up again. The market shows considerable strength.

NEW BRUNSWICK.

St. John, Nov. 24.—The continued scarcity of fish of all kinds has resulted in an advance in the prices of several lines. Cod and haddock are now quoted at 3 to 3½ cents a pound. There are a few frozen mackerel and halibut, as well as an occasional small chicken halibut, taken in the trawls. There is the usual variety of smoked fish, but stocks are low and prices high. Salt cod are highrer now than they have ever been according to the local dealers. The price advanced last week to $5 for large or medium and $3.75 to $4 for small fish. Up to this last year salt cod was sold retail at 5 cents a pound.

With the failure of the Grand Manan fisheries, the island faces conditions that have not existed in a decade, and schooner men arriving here from the fishing grounds say the situation is serious with winter close at hand and much hardship will be experienced. Many of the fishing vessels will be forced to lay up this winter. Sardines are very scarce now and sales have been made lately as high as $15 to $35 per hogshead.

A resident in St. Pierre, Miquelon, who was in the city last week reported that the fisheries there had been so bad this year that many of the inhabitants were leaving the island and going to the United States and Canada. The conditions there are more serious than in many years.

QUEBEC.

Montreal, Nov. 24.—With the approach of Advent and the closing of navigation there is a strong demand for all grades of fresh, salted and frozen fish, while large quantities of pickled and salted are moving. At the same time orders for frozen fish are coming in freely. Heavy consignments are in transit from the coast. Prices are about the same as last year, except good qualities of salmon which are advancing.

The trade in smoked and prepared fish is normal.

Haddock and cod are a little more plentiful and prices are slightly lower. Some fresh halibut is arriving by express—the price, 10c. being low for this season of the year.

ONTARIO.

Toronto, Nov. 24.—Locally, trade is centralized on haddock, whitefish, frozen halibut and trout. The demand is good and supplies are fair. The demand for dried and smoked fish is increasing and a good trade is reported. On the whole the market shows improvement and December is looked upon to supply even better business. Oysters are rather scarce according to the general news. The demand is good and that makes the scarcity all the more apparent.

BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Vancouver, Nov. 24.—There is little doing in the fish market this week. There were no boats in last week, and up to date none have yet arrived. It was reported the other day that there was a probability of a fish famine, but this is hardly probable. While fish are harder to get, nothing of that kind is anticipated. "Every once in a while such a rumor starts," remarked the manager of a large fishing company, "but that does not say that the famine will take place."

NOVA SCOTIA.

Halifax, Nov. 24.—There is a general scarcity of fresh fish in all the markets, and the cause is assigned principally to the stormy weather on the fishing grounds. Few fish are being taken on the in-shore ground, and those that are being caught on the banks are salted. The scarcity of fresh fish is not confined to the local market alone, but there is also a shortage at all the U. S. fish centres. Few haddock are arriving and as a result the supply is running short. One dealer in this city had 38,000 lbs. of smoked haddies in his storehouse, and this week orders came in so fast that the whole lot was cleaned up. The majority of this lot was sent to the upper Canadian market. Fresh herring are coming in more plentifully, but there is only a limited demand. They sell more readily when salted. There is very little doing in smelts. All the cargoes of dry cod are quickly bought up. The demand is good and there is keen competition. The general opinion among the trade is that prices will go higher, and that all the stocks on hand will be cleared up before the spring. At all centres outside of Lunenburg, the catch of cod is below the average. There is practically nothing doing in the mackerel trade.

Green cod have been purchased at Lunenburg and shipped to Boston. Large shore cod are now quoted at $7 to $7.25, and medium hard shore at $6.50 to $6.75. Large Bank at $6. Mackerel No. 1 are quoted at $20, No. 2's at $18, and large 3's, $12.50. The best herring are quoted at $4.50. Haddock range from $3.75 to $4.25 per quintal.

SEPARATE STORAGE.

For Bananas and Citrus Fruit is Advocated as Result of Experiments.

Washington, D.C., Nov. 24.—Exeprriments on the gases given off by bananas and oranges respectively have been carried on at the laboratory. It was shown that oranges gave off a good deal of carbonic acid gas when stored in a closed place, as in a ship's hold, but on the other hand carbonic acid gas has proven to be a wonderful preservative of bananas. It was shown, however, by direct trial, that emanations from oranges stored in a chamber were found to have the effect of bringing about the premature ripening of bananas, if these gases were passed through a chamber laden with this fruit.

The practical lesson indicated by these experiments is that separate storage is desirable for citrus fruits and bananas, especially when they are being transported long distances by sea. Open-sided boxes for the escape of the orange gases and an effective cooling of the fruit in the cold chamber also appears to be a crucial matter which some orange shippers consistently ignore, with the result that their fruit arrives in bad condition and financial losses occur.

TO PRODUCE BETTER POULTRY.

Farmers are Offered Prizes for the Best Birds by Montreal Firm.

Montreal, Nov. 24.—With a view to encouraging farmers to raise a better standard of poultry, Gunn, Langlois & Co. are offering cash prizes to those who produce the best. The total amount that will be distributed in prizes will be $100 in gold, divided into three classes—turkeys, chickens, geese or ducks. In the former case the prizes will amount to $25, $15 and $10. and in the cases of the other two, $15 and $10.

The chief conditions governing the competition are:

Competitors may enter in either class, but shipments must consist of the following numbers in each class, namely: 12 turkeys, 24 chickens, 12 ducks or 12 geese.

Poultry must be killed by bleeding in the mouth, must be undrawn, dry-picked and clean of feathers.

Poultry must be packed in cases containing 12 birds each, style of packing and general appearance will count in deciding awards.

Birds must not be frozen.

Competitors must be farmers only. Two or more may co-operate and ship under their joint names.

With a view of extending and assisting us in the educational work, competitors must agree to furnish particulars asked for on attached forms, and undertake to do all in their power to further the poultry interests by making an honest effort to increase the production in their section of the country during the coming year.

Professor Fred C. Elford, of Macdonald College, has agreed to act as judge, and his decision shall be final. Results will be announced December 24th.

CANNED TOMATO INFORMATION.

Opening Prices in 1905 and 1906—Advances in Spring of Latter Year.

Editor Canadian Grocer,—Can you tell us what the opening prices on canned tomatoes were in 1905? There was a big advance in the spring of 1906. What was this advance, and when did it occur? What was the opening price in 1906?

C. B.

Picton, Ont.

Editorial Note.—The opening prices on tomatoes in 1905 for 3's were 92½ and 95 cents per dozen. These prices were given out about the middle of September. For gallons the prices were $3 and $3.02½. In February, 1906, prices began to advance. On Feb. 16 they were 95 cents and $1 per dozen for 3's; on March 9 they were $1.05 and $1.10; on March 30 they were $120 and $1.25, and on April 4 the prices were $1.25 and $1.30, at which prices they remained until the new pack for 1906 was quoted. Opening prices for 1906 on 3's were $1.15 and $1.17½, and for gallons, $3.50 to $3.52½. These prices were named towards the end of September of that year.

EXTENDING ASSOCIATION WORK.

British Columbia Grocers Touring the Province Telling Aims of Organization.

Vancouver, B.C., Nov. 24.—The first steps taken to enlist the interior merchants in the interests of the Retail Merchants' Association of British Columbia proved successful. The committee that was appointed at the meeting in Victoria, when organization was completed, consisting of F. W. Welsh, Vancouver, president; R. D. Dinning, Vancouver, secretary; and Wm. Clark, president of the Vancouver local association, went to Kamloops and Revelstoke, and did not find one objector. It was their intention to have gone down to Rossland and Nelson, but found the train service inconvenient, and will leave for there in about a week.

After the Kootenay towns are visited, and the benefits of association laid before the members there, the committee will go to Vancouver Island, and interview the merchants in Ladysmith, Nanaimo, Cumberland, Victoria and the smaller places. It will be remembered the scope of the B. C. Retail Grocers' Exchange was enlarged so as to make it provincial, including merchants of all kinds. The name was changed so as to suggest this.

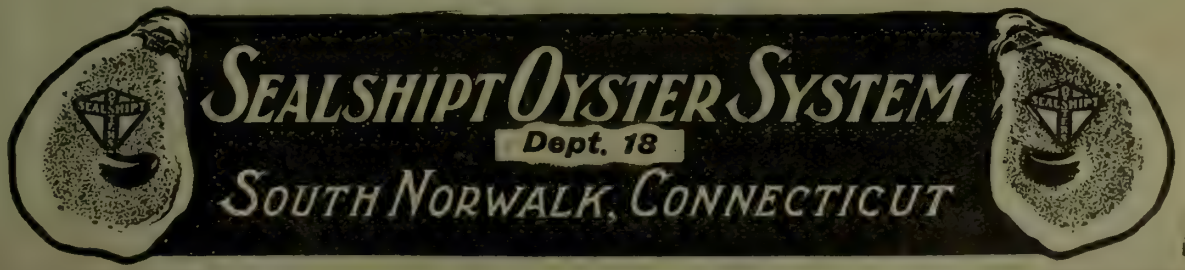
The "Sealshiptor"

The best policy of OYSTER INSURANCE is to see that you get your oysters in a SEALSHIPTOR the only way genuine Sealshipt Oysters are shipped

Sealshipt Paper Pail

How Sealshipt Oysters are Transported in Sealshiptors from Bed to Dealer



SEALSHIPT OYSTERS are shucked and packed directly at the beds. The solid meats are packed in SEALSHIPT containers, which are air-tight and germ proof, and cannot be opened during transit. The SEALSHIPTOR itself is properly insulated and practically air-tight. It will keep oysters in perfect condition. Genuine SEALSHIPT OYSTERS are not packed for shipment in any other way—be sure you get yours in a SEALSHIPTOR, because then you know they have the real "tang" of the sea, the natural flavor that will delight your customers.

How You Should Tell Them

Since you know you are handling genuine SEALSHIPT OYSTERS, advertise the fact to your customers by using SEALSHIPT PAPER PAILS. We are making these pails a feature of our magazine advertising, and people look for them, as well as the SEALSHIPTICASE, to identify genuine SEALSHIPT OYSTERS. These pails are the only ones cut to exact measure, they are made of high-grade waterproof paper, and have wire handles for convenience in carrying. We supply them at small cost to you, including the printing of your advertisement on the top flap.

Our Local Advertising Helps

SEALSHIPT OYSTER AGENTS make money because we help them. We give you attractive blue and white muslin signs, a blue and white steel sign for your store front, a transparent sign for your door, and arrange with you for the instalation of a SEALSHIPTICASE, the blue and white porcelain fixture for the storage and display of SEALSHIPT OYSTERS. People are instantly reminded of our magazine advertising by these means and know you are selling the genuine SEALSHIPT OYSTERS they have read about. They will leave a store that sells no oysters, or only ordinary oysters, and go to the store where genuine SEALSHIPT OYSTERS are sold. Be the one to secure this trade; it means increased oyster business at a profit that can't be less than 25 per cent. Write for our catalogue and full particulars.

per capita, used in St. Catharines, where the goods are manufactured, than any other point in Canada.

The Reason is plain

Our locally well-known sanitary methods, together with the equally well-known quality of our ingredients, cannot help but invite the patronage of the good people of St. Catharines.

"We now have every merchant but one, and he says he's getting too old to bother much about increasing his business."

The above comment was attached to the report of one of our subscription men after he had visited a good-sized town the other day.

In every city, town and village from Halifax to Vancouver almost every good merchant is a regular reader of The Grocer. Manufacturers and wholesalers find this paper a profitable advertising medium, not only because of the Quantity of its circulation, but very largely because of the Quality of the interest which its editorial pages secure for their advertisements.

"CANNED by GRIFFIN"

Until you break the shell of a nut you are wholly in the dark as to the quality of the meat therein. A fair exterior often covers an unsatisfactory interior. Quality depends largely upon reputation—you've got to be guided by that. Be guided, then (if seeking highest quality in Canned Fruits), by these three words, "Canned by Griffin," and you'll be absolutely safe.

Griffin & Skelley Canned Fruits and Asparagus

Canned Apricots, Canned Peaches, Pears, White Cherries, Black Cherries, Damson Plums, Egg Plums, Golden Drop Plums, Greengages, Raspberries, Strawberries. By the three words, "Canned by Griffin," you know these products as safe canned fruits to buy and sell.

Ram Lal's Pure Tea

wins its way easily with high-class trade

BECAUSE

It is carefully grown, expertly blended, and sealed in lead packets, to retain all its natural fragrance.

Ram Lal's Pure Tea Co., Limited

MONTREAL, CANADA

THERE are a good many housekeepers in every neighborhood who, if they were not already using COWAN'S Cake Icings, would do so if they knew how good and how convenient they are. That means a profitable trade for the Grocer who develops it. Why shouldn't you be the one? With Cowan's Cake Icings no eggs are required. The directions are on the package.

"QUAKER" BAKED BEANS

Quaker Beans, in the new style of can—3's, family size, in Tomato Sauce or in Chili Sauce at the same price as plain—certainly is a winner. It's a combination of quality and quantity that appeals very strongly to the average housewife. More beans to the can than in 3's flat! In Quaker Brand we use nothing but selected, hand-picked beans, that have been grown right in the neighborhood of our factories.

Scientific processing methods, coupled with extreme care in the selection of all sauces and spices used, make this Quaker Brand unalterably delicious and appetizing.
